He will be in town Saturday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday next, from 10.30 a. m. to 2 p. m., and any orders left at this office will be promptly attended to.

THE SCHOOL HOUSE QUESTION SETTLED.

It is doubtful if a larger crowd was ever present at a Palmer town meeting than that which assembled last Monday to act on the matter of the high school building. S. S. Taft was chosen moderator. Thomas Moran moved to take up article second, to see if the town would rescind the vote of the last meeting to build a high school building in the village of Palmer, at a cost of $12,000, remarking that the first meeting was attended by only residents of that village, but that at this meeting all parts of the town were represented, and that any action on the school house question ought to be emphatic and final. There was a good deal of talk on the question, and some unfair insinuations made by both sides, before the vote was taken. Owing to the crowded state of the room the moderator ordered all who were not voters out of doors, and then divided the house, which stood nearly three to one against rescinding the former vote. The result was doubted and the house again divided, with the same result. The meeting was then adjourned, after a session of only 30 minutes. Fully 500 voters were present, from every nook and corner of the town.

Frank Beckwith, whose foot was amputated five weeks ago on account of an injury received at the quarry, is able to be out on crutches, which shows the good judgment of the surgeons in amputating the foot instead of trying to save it when completely crushed.

Here is a little incident in connection with the Stafford fair. A number of Monson people who tried to board the 4.45 train at the Springs were informed by a railroad official that they must wait for a special train which would soon follow. Sure enough, it did soon follow, but did not stop! Imagine the feelings of those poor mortals toward the railroad company. To make matters worse, no one at Stafford could convey the party home, so a carriage was telephoned from Monson. It arrived at 10 o'clock, with a driver who had imbibed pretty freely, but he managed to land all safely on "native heather" in the vicinity of 1 o'clock a. m.

The body was recovered Wednesday.

Rev. A. T. Perry preached at the Memorial church in Springfield last Sunday, and his pulpit was filled by Rev. Dr. Ploublet, of Natick, the writer of the International Sunday-school Lessons, who gave the audience a treat in the morning and evening. The chapel was filled full in the evening, and all who hear him wished that he could have spoken longer. Should he speak here again there would surely be a large attendance.

The Maratha Mission Band of the East Congregational Sunday-school held their harvest festival at the chapel on Tuesday evening. The place was very tastefully decorated, and the entertainment consisted of a shadow pantomime. There was a good attendance, the band clearing a little over $40. The receipts are to be used to aid in giving an education to young women in India. They have helped to support and educate five girls there since the band was formed.

There were but few out to the meeting of the Farmer's Club last Monday evening at Ware Center, so it was postponed until next Monday evening. It is to be held at their club room, and the subject of the meeting is "Our experience in farming the past season." They are making arrangements for a chicken pie supper, which is to be held in the vestry on Friday evening of next week. The suppers at the Center are enjoyed and long remembered by all who attend them. The proceeds are for benevolent purposes.

The new French Protestant church sent its first delegates to the Brookfield Associational Conference, which met at Warren on Tuesday, the pastor, Rev. Thomas Dorion, and Dr. A. A. Auger representing this church. The church was proposed to membership, and was heartily accepted by the conference. The subject in the morning was "The foreign work in America." Rev. Mr. Dorion and Rev. Mr. Cote spoke on the subject. The church is in a prosperous condition, money coming in for the work from all sides. One member of the conference subscribed $100, and has promised to do more later. They hope that their chapel will be built and ready to use some time before the first of the year.

While Alvin Robbins's little daughter was driving home from the street Thursday morning, the horse ran near the town hall and started down West street until he had crossed the Muddy brook bridge, where Mr. Sullivan, who was driving one of Lawton's teams, attempted to check him, but it was of no use, for he was knocked down and stepped on by the horse. He was unable to rise and was taken up and carried to the doctor's, being quite seriously injured. The rapid run continued until the horse was turned into the sand bank near John Dexter's, where it was brought to a stand. Miss Robbins was not hurt but was considerably frightened. This is the second time this same horse has run when driven by children.

ST. WILLIAM'S FAIR.

The grand fair for the benefit of the building fund of St. William's Catholic church, under the direction of Rev. James Boyle, opened under the most favorable circumstances at the town hall Monday evening. The hall is most beautifully decorated, and the tables on which the large display of articles to be disposed of are exhibited, are arranged with the canopies over them in a very tasty manner. In their shape and size they are similar, but in their decorations they are according to the tastes of the several committees having them in charge, and are very fine, the best ever seen in town, showing that the right persons have been selected for these positions. There are seven of these tables, and they are loaded with the greatest variety of useful and ornamental articles, to enumerate which would occupy half of our paper. Most of the articles are to be disposed of by ticket, although there is one table where some choice articles are offered for sale. The ladies' waiting room has been transformed into a dainty dining room, where ice cream and more substantial refreshments are served in a manner to please the most fastidious. The Ware Cornet Orchestra, under the direction of Henry Smith, keeps things lively each evening with music. There is to be some sort of entertainment every evening. Monday evening there was a series of tableaux, under the direction of John W. Clark, P. J. Mulvany, James E. Clark, William Peakin, W. J. Nichols, Miss Mulvany and others. Tuesday evening was presented the operetta "Poor Henry, the Waif," under the direction of John Kennedy, who is an actor of no small ability, and who has a wonderful aptitude to handle a body of 75 or 80 little ones in a way to get the most enjoyment for the audience out of the entertainment. The leading part, "Poor Henry," was taken by Master Johnnie Kennedy in a masterly manner. His singing was received with great applause, which was well deserved. One great enjoyment of a visit to the fair is to see the genial, happy face of Father Boyle, who seems to be everywhere present to see that all shall have a good time.

The operetta "Poor Henry" will be repeated next Tuesday evening. New articles are being daily added to the fair, and last evening the polls were opened for voting for the most popular couple, members of St. Williams' congregation, who have been married since Jan. 1, 1887.

GOV. AMES is turning these beautiful autumn days to good account, in a political point of view, by making himself more familiar with Western Massachusetts and its leading politicians and business men. He has already made protracted visits to various sections of Hampshire, Franklin and Berkshire counties, has attended an occasional fair, and has thus afforded a large number of people an opportunity of becoming personally acquainted with him. Tuesday night he was given a reception in City Hall, Springfield, and was there met by a representative gathering of the citizens of Hampden county. The reception was attended by a number of ladies, and was on the whole a great success. The governor is said to have made a favorable impression upon all who were present. He was accompanied by most of his council, and also by the lieutenant-governor and the secretary of state. The occasion was honored with the presence of a few other prominent officials, but there was no speech-making, and an entire absence of formalities of any kind.

It didn't take the delegates to the Hampden county Republican convention at Springfield yesterday long to decide that L. F. Root, of Westfield, was the right kind of a man to keep on the board of county commissioners. He was nominated without a ballot, which shows pretty conclusively that during the time he has held the office he has performed its duties to the general satisfaction of all concerned.

BITS OF NEWS.

There was a $340,000 fire at Syracuse, N. Y., Tuesday evening.

Col. T. P. Pierce, a prominent citizen of Nashua, N. H., died last Friday.

Another steamer, the Brittania, from Naples, is held at the New York quarantine station, having four cases of cholera on board.

An unfinished parochial school at New York fell Monday, killing the priest in charge and six other persons. The priest had been granted a permit for a two-story building, but had gone up four stories with no further strengthening of the lower walls.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Oct. 19, 1887.

Reports from the country districts are to the effect that but little interest is shown in political matters, but they are of a different tone here and hereabouts. The most interesting part of the canvass continues to be the attempt of the liquor dealers to control the Senate. A Republican leader who tells me that he has inside information says that the liquor men have a sub-committee of fifteen in their state organization whose duty it is to look after the counties separately, learn the amount of work which must be done to secure the election of a man who will, at least, vote to let the liquor trade alone, and then see that the right man is nominated and elected. At the Democratic state headquarters today there is undoubtedly a growing confidence that they will carry more senatorial districts than they did last year, and there is a corresponding anxiety on the part of the Republicans. In the Legislature of 1887 the Senate stood 25 Republicans to 15 Democrats. There are one or two districts which the Republicans ought to gain from the Democrats, but the chances at present are not bright. Last year's experience of the way the liquor men controlled the Senate ought to be a sharp warning against them this year, and I hope that the voters will wake up to the situation.

The three, yes, four, parties will soon be formally in the field. Last week the labor men had their little gathering in Faneuil Hall. Monday evening Tremont Temple was filled at the enthusiastic Prohibitory rally. This evening the Democrats in Faneuil hall will open with their big guns. Edward Avery will preside. The speakers on the posters are Col. Watson of Indiana, W. H. Crane of Texas, Patrick A. Collins, Leopold Morse, William E. Russell, John W. Cummings, Charles Levi Woodbury, Frederick O. Prince, Jonas H. French and John K. McDonough. George M. Stearns, who was invited, is conspicuous by his absence. William E. Russell, however, has swallowed his disgust enough to make a speech, though some of his friends have said he would not go on the stump this year. All of the speakers otherwise are old-line Democrats, whose presence signifies nothing new in the way of policy or principle. McDonough is a young Boston member of the Legislature who has made a good record for public speaking in the last two years.

Next Monday evening the Republicans will have a big rally in Music Hall. John D. Long will reside. Congressman Burrows of Michigan, Senator Hoar and other leading speakers of the party will furnish the oratory of the evening, and tickets for seats on the platform are being sent out to-day to those who are fortunate enough to be "distinguished citizens." By the way, that reminds me that at the woman's temperance meeting this forenoon it was stated that the petition for constitutional prohibition had been signed by 33,000 names, of which 28,000 were those of "influential voters." That is almost as much honor as to be vice president at a political convention. The tickets to the platform seats above mentioned are very neat and old, and have "Ames and Brackett" in red capitals diagonally across the black type.

A few circulars are being sent out by the Republicans. One is a closely printed sheet containing the law on registration, the laws to prevent counterfeiting of ballots, to prohibit the sale or delivery of intoxicating liquors on election days, and to prevent the counting of detached stickers as ballots. I do not find any such campaign literature in the Democratic ammunition room, but they have posted on their walls a copy of Chapter 272, Acts of 1887, providing that every voter employed in a manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment shall be entitled to two hours after the opening of the polls in which to vote, and that any one who employes him or permits him to be employed during that time shall be liable to a fine of from $20 to $50 for each offence. The Republicans will send out little documents in a few days upon the tariff, labor and temperance questions. Some of them at headquarters have the idea that Mr. Lovering and his friends are making a still hunt, after his style of congressional campaigning in the sixth district. Many quiet little conferences are said to have been held already.

Whatever prospect there may have been a few weeks ago that the mugwumps would nominate an independent candidate for governor, it has wholly gone by; fortunately, too, I have no doubt; for many who were anti-Blaine in 1884 have voted continuously with the Republicans for their state ticket, and wish specially to make the condemnation of the Democratic platform and its candidate as marked as possible. In no way can this be done so effectively as by voting for Gov. Ames, whose record on every question except the soldiers' exemption law is acceptable even to the Independents. In most matters he has done much better than they expected.

The Prohibitionists, at their headquarters, are not boasting any to speak of, but modestly say that they hope to get from 10,000 to 12,000 votes, against 8200 last year. The Republicans concede them 10,000. The meeting of the Massachusetts Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Tremont Temple (yesterday, to-day and to-morrow) has been crowded and enthusiastic. The women are dead in earnest in their temperance work, and, if their ways of managing are different from men's, they dispatch business with reasonable promptness, and do not confuse their presiding officer, Miss E. S. Tobey. They propose to increase their membership from 11,000 to 20,000, and to push the temperance work in the Legislature.

Harvey N. Shepard, who was assistant attorney general with Gen. Sherman, has gone into the law office of George S. Hale, one of the leading lawyers of Boston, and will give himself wholly to law practice.

I am told by one who knows that at the meeting of the American Missionary Association in Portland next week, facts will be presented to show that the feeling in Georgia which supported the infamous Glenn bill to punish white teachers who taught mixed schools (aimed at Atlanta university where the professors taught their own children) is equally strong in Kentucky and Mississippi. At the meeting a eulogy on the late ex-Gov. W. B. Washburn (their president) will be delivered by Rev. Dr. S. G. Buckingham of Springfield.

THE TORTILITA MINES.

HOW THE PROPERTY IMPRESSED A HARTFORD MAN.

A Shrewd Yankee Sends an Expert to Look Over the Property—The Expert's Opinion and Advice.

The Tortilita Gold and Silver Mining Company's Arizona mining properties, which were quite fully described in the Evening Post on the 17th inst., have attracted wide attention, opening up, as they do, some wonderful experiences in mining precious ores, and a most remarkable opportunity for safe and profitable investment. Our readers will be interested in a perusal of the following extract from a private letter received in this city yesterday, which bears directly upon this subject, and fully substantiates the favorable impression already created and confirmed by the statements of the Post and other leading journals in various parts of the country. We quote:

KANSAS CITY, MO., August 25th, 1887.

Dear Brother—Your telegram of the 18th inst. found me at Los Angeles, California, but an hour or two before my intended departure for the East, and I am very happy to have been able to perform the happy task which you assigned to me, of a side trip to the Owl's Head mining district, on my way home. I left Los Angeles at 10.15 a. m. on Thursday, by the Southern Pacific railroad, and at 11.45 next morning found myself at Tucson, which your dispatch informed me was the nearest important railroad point to the mines. Although your instructions by wire were simply to "go to the mines and get at the true inwardness of the whole business," I easily understood that what you wanted of me was to know from the personal observation of a reliable friend all that could be learned about some mining scheme in which you or your neighbors were probably invited to become participants, and in which your confidence might perhaps not be absolute. I have, as you know, seen something of mines and mining in California and Colorado; and so when the Tucson boniface asked me if I wanted a top or open buggy I told him to give me his best saddle horse, and without an ounce of baggage I started off over the hills, thirty odd miles to the camp of the Tortilita Mining Company. The roads were much better than I expected to find, and the clock was just striking six when I reined up to an unpretentious wooden building which looked as if it might be the camp post office, or a store, but it proved to be the office of the mining company and the headquarters of D. T. Elmore, superintendent in charge of the active operations at the mines. Declining the hospitality which he offered, I managed to get supper and lodging at the boarding house adjoining the little crushing and smelting works and at an early hour next morning set out for the mines, which had been located for me by a Mexican at the mill in such a way that by the aid of a rough sketch which I made on paper under his direction, I felt sure of easily finding them. There are twelve mines in the Tortilita group. I personally visited and inspected eight of these mines during the day, finding active operations at only six, viz: The Jesse Benton, Tom Benton, By Chance, By Chance Extension at the northeast cluster, and the Red Peach and Lazy Sleeper at the southwest cluster. The little mill has only five stamps, and but a very moderate amount of mining is necessary to keep it going. There is any quantity of ore in sight and within easy reach at all of the eight mines which I saw, and I am amazed that the management is satisfied with this little one horse mill, knocking the ore to pieces with five stamps, and getting out six or eight hundred dollars a day, while a fifty-stamp mill might be supplied with good rich ore from the mines for twenty years to come, yielding six or eight thousand dollars a day without beginning to exhaust this great field of precious metal. Elmore tells me that the present company are negotiating somewhere in the East for two or three twenty-stamp mills. If this be true, you may set it down for a fact that this Owl's Head district will astonish the world by the vastness and richness of its deposits, and the company which owns this group of mines will become the wealthiest mining corporation at least in America.

I remained one day and two nights at the camp, coming on to Kansas City by the Atlantic express which reached Tucson at midday on Sunday, arriving here early this morning, and now embracing the first opportunity to write to you. I go to Chicago this evening, and thence to Minneapolis, not expecting to reach Connecticut before the second or third week in September. When I see you I can give you by word of mouth a great many interesting details of my two days in the saddle—one day going to and from Tucson and the camp, and the other among the mines.

I found my mail awaiting me at the Crocker House, and among the letters and papers a copy of the Hartford Evening Post of the 17th, with its splendid map and description of the Tortilita mines. It is all very well done, and interests me much in view of my jaunt over the properties. The story is in no respect overdrawn. I notice that the Superintendent's statements to me concerning the proposed new stamping works are confirmed. This settles the question as to the future of the mines and the mining company that owns them. What is the stock of the company selling at? It will be well to advise all our friends to get in if they can do so anywhere near the ground floor. This is my candid conclusion. You know me well enough to judge whether the advice is of any good.

Very hastily but truly yours,
E. F. DENSLOW.

Hartford (Conn.) Post, Aug. 31, '87.

The Tortilita Gold and Silver Mining Company has for its president Mr. Joseph M. Reall, president also of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association, and well known among the farmers of America, an experienced business man, well versed in financial matters.

The shares of the Tortilita Company are being taken all over the country for investment by bankers, merchants, farmers, mechanics and laboring men and women. They can only be bought now by private subscription, and those wishing to purchase will do well to send in their orders at once, as the books will close preparatory to calling the stock on the board. The shares can now be bought at par in any sized lots, from one share to 5000, direct from Mr. Joseph H. Reall, at the Company's office, 57 Broadway, New York, or 48 Congress street, Boston.

It is believed that the Tortilita is one of the soundest and best mining enterprises yet brought to the attention of the public, and that those who invest in it will reap handsome returns. They are at least sure of a safe investment and good dividends.

There is but a portion of the stock for sale, and that is for the purpose of putting up the additional machinery required.—New York Star.

Some Things Learned by Experience,

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly, That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1 00 per bottle. eow7

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

I had stone in the bladder and gravel in the kidneys. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy disintergrated the stone and delivered me from it. I am now well. I should long ago have been six feet under the sod if I had not taken Dr. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY.—D. D. HOAG, Lebanon Springs, N. Y. Price $1. Send 2-cent stamp to Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y., for a book on Kidney, Liver and Blood disorders. Mention this paper. 4w27

BRACE UP.

You are feeling depressed, your appetite is poor, you are bothered with Headache, you are fidgetty, nervous, and generally out of sorts, and want to brace up. Brace up, but not with stimulants, spring medicines, or bitters, which have for their basis very cheap, bad whisky, and which stimulate you for an hour, and then leave you in worse condition than before. What you want is an alterative that will purify your blood, start healthy action of Liver and Kidneys, restore your vitality, and give renewed health and strength. Such a medicine you will find in Electric Bitters, at only 50 cents a bottle at LeGro and Lynde's Drug Store. 3

THEIR BUSINESS BOOMING.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted. 3

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by Legro & Lynde. 1y29

GIVE THEM A CHANCE!

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend on this for certain. 1y46eow

Thistle came across the sea,
Volunteer!
Sure of winning as could be,
Volunteer!
She had walked away with ease
From the fleet on English seas,
And she longed our cup to seize,
Volunteer!

So she anchored in the bay,
Volunteer!
And looked forward to the day,
Volunteer!
When her snowy wings would sweep
Like a wonder o'er the deep,
And the lead defiant keep,
Volunteer.

And the day came on apace,
Volunteer!
And they signalled for the race,
Volunteer!
But, alack, the canny Scot
At the finish first was not,
And the cup he has not got,

Robinson—"Yes, I know he saved your life. But $200, Dumley! That's too much.—New York Sun.

One day Frederick of Prussia paused to speak to a Jew, but the wary Hebrew took to his heels. The King pursued, and after a brisk chase overtook the flying subject. "Why did you run away from me, rascal?" "Because," frankly admitted the Hebrew, "I was afraid." "Fritz" hit him a tremendous whack with his cane. "Villain," he roared, "I don't wan't to be feared; I want to be loved."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Judge—"Of course you have an excuse ready?" Prisoner—"I have, your honor, I was full, but it was for medical purposes. Whisky is good for snake bites." Judge—"Were you bitten by a snake?" Prisoner—"No, but your honor, 'an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.'" Judge—"I see, I see. But you should have confined yourself to the ounce. I fine you $10 for prescribing medicine without a diploma."—Omaha Herald.

POND'S EXTRACT

VEGETABLE

PAIN DESTROYER.

Hemorrhages. Bleeding from the LUNGS, stomach, nose or from any cause is speedily controlled and stopped.

Sores, Ulcers, Wounds, Sprains and Bruises. It is cooling, cleansing and HEALING.

Catarrh. It is most efficacious for this disease, cold in the head, etc. POND'S EXTRACT CATARRH CURE, specially prepared to meet serious cases, should be applied with Pond's Extract Nasal Syringe.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia. No other preparation has cured more cases of these distressing complaints than the extract. POND'S EXTRACT PLASTER is invaluable in these diseases, Lumbago, Pains in the Back or Side, Etc.

Diphtheria, Sore Throat, use the EXTRACT promptly. Delay is dangerous.

Piles, Blind, Bleeding or Itching. It is the greatest known remedy; rapidly curing when other medicines have failed. POND'S EXTRACT OINTMENT is of great service where the removal of clothing is inconvenient.

For Broken Breast and Sore Nipples. Mothers who have once used The Extract will never be without it. Pond's Extract Ointment is the best emollient that can be applied.

Female Complaints. In the majority of female diseases The Extract can be used, as is well known, with the greatest benefit. Full directions accompany each bottle.

CAUTION.—POND'S EXTRACT has been imitated. The genuine has the words "POND'S EXTRACT" blown in the glass, and our picture trade-mark on surrounding buff wrapper. None other is genuine. Always insist on having Pond's Extract. Take no other preparation. It is never sold by bulk or by measure.

SOLD EVERYWHERE. Prices, 50 cents. $1.00, $1.75.

When you can buy the Best Blood Purifier and Nerve Tonic for Fifty Cents.

THORN'S

Hop and Burdock Tonic

STANDS AT THE HEAD OF ALL

SARSAPARILLAS, BITTERS, TONICS,

And Similar Preparations.

It is prepared with the greatest care by I. B. Thorn, who has had twenty years of acutal experience in compounding Physicians' prescriptions, and is warranted not to contain a particle of aloes or any injurious drug.

It is composed of Sarsaparilla Root, Burdock Root, Prickly Ash Bark, Mandrake Root, Golden Seal Root, Dandelion Root and the best Northern grown Hops, the proportions of which when properly combined make the best preparation in existance for curing all blood diseases.

It is the Best Tonic and Invigorator, as Hundreds can Testify.

It cures Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, General Debility, Mental and Physical Exhaustion, and Nervous Prostration.

There is no other preparation like it, and no other that has had the sale in so short a time. Its merits have sold nearly Seventeen Thousand Bottles in the last two years.

SULPHUR

BITTERS

THE BEST AND PUREST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

TRUTHS FOR THE SICK.

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those Pimples and Blotches which mar your beauty are caused by impure blood, and can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS.

DON'T / GIVE / UP! — What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle, soothing tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. Sulphur Bitters is NOT a cheap rum or poor whisky drink, to be taken by the glass, like other preparations, which stimulate only to destroy. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible headache? Why lay and toss on that bed of pain with rheumatism?

If you have failed to receive any benefit from other medicines or doctors, do not despair. Use Sulphur Bitters. They will cure you when all others fail. No person can remain long sick who uses SULPHUR BITTERS.

The dose is small—only a teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied. Get it of your druggist. Don't wait, get it at once. If you are suffering from Kidney Disease, and wish to live to old age, use Sulphur Bitters. They never fail to cure SULPHUR BITTERS.

We have a very large assortment of John Bromley & Son's best quality Smyrna Rugs In all Sizes at Bottom Price. Every party in need of Carpets ought to see and examine our stock in this department. We can save you money every time.

LACE DEPARTMENT.

GREAT SALE OF BLACK LACES.

This lot of Black Laces which we offer at such a terrific reduction from former prices was purchased from a large importer to clean up his spring stock before he opened his fall goods. We bought nearly $500 (Five Hundred Dollars) worth for $100 (One Hundred Dollars). We have put the entire lot on sale at 6¼ cents. None of the patterns was sold for less than 25c. up to 50c. We also offer a lot of Fine Ornamental Laces at 15 cents. Never sold for less than 37½c. to 50c. In the purchase were 400 pieces

Wide Hamburgs Which we offer at 25 cents. The goods would bring in New York 37½ cents wholesale.

This is a Great Bargain.

SILK & VELVET DEPARTMENT.

We shall open this week our Fall Importation of SILKS AND VELVETS, without any doubt the largest assortment we have ever had the pleasure of offering to the Springfield public, and at prices much under Spring. Ladies who desire a BLACK SILK DRESS that will wear and give entire satisfaction, should call and examine those beautiful Black Rhadames, of our own importation, a make of goods which we warrant to our customers for six months. ELEGANT ASSORTMENT OF COLORED RHADAMES AT $1. Same quality sold in New York at $1.25 by one of the largest retail houses. BLACK AND COLORED FAILLES in all the most desirable shades for street and evening wear. The best value in the country at $1.25. Examine our stock of Silks before you make a purchase. We are positive we can save you money every time. Making our purchases direct with the manufacturers, we save the jobber's profit.

HOSIERY DEPARTMENT.

We beg to announce to the ladies of Springfield and vicinity that we shall offer the largest assortment of Foreign and Domestic Hosiery ever shown in this city. Our stock will embrace products of the best English, French and German manufactures, having been selected with special care that we should have nothing but goods suitable for first class trade. We shall also offer an immense stock of Ladies', Men's and Children's Merino and Wool Underwear, in all qualities, from the cheapest up to the finest goods imported. As a special bargain we shall offer about 75 dozen Ladies' and Men's Underwear from one of the best manufacturers. This was their entire stock of odds and ends, after the season's business. We offer a lot at $1 each, worth $1.50 to $3. We offer a lot of Men's Jersey Shirts, Double back and front. This is a lot of shirts that was made for the California market, and is just the thing for men that are at work out of doors. Every expressman should examine this shirt. After they are gone no more can be had in this market. We offer them at $1.50, which is just half-price.

Little Maid with Lovers Twain.

Was ever a soul so pestered; dear me, what shall I do?
I thought there was none like Robin, and loved him real and true;
I thought there was none like Robin, but now that Jamie's here,
I look at Robin and Jamie, and both of them are dear!
And whether the old or new love wins, I canna tell as yet.
Alack! Aweel! I'll wait and see which way my heart shall set!

Was ever a soul so worried? I wouldna do a wrong;
But there is Robin and Jamie—I canna to both belong;
Yet when a walking with Robin, I think him the finest lad;
And when Jamie comes a-wooing, I canna for long be sad!
And whether the old or new love wins, I canna tell as yet.
Alack! Aweel! I'll wait and see which way my heart shall set!

Was ever a soul so beat about? I dinna, canna see
How that Robin and Jamie can both belong to me!
For Robin's like the sunshine with eyes of sunny light,
And Jamie's like the darkness with eyes of dusky night!
Yet whether the old or new love wins, I canna tell as yet.
Alack! Aweel! I'll wait and see which way my heart shall set!

Was ever a soul so badgered? Whichever way I turn,
Whether to Robin or Jamie, the truth I canna learn.
A many a thing in Robin helps me to hold him near.
And many a thing in Jamie makes him as passing dear!
And betwixt the old and new love, my heart is sore beset!
Alack! Aweel! I'll wait and see, I will na wed as yet!

POLLY'S BISCUIT.

"Polly, don't buy your pearls to-day." Polly Rutherford looked up quickly from the jeweler's case she was bending over, and saw Mr. McIlwaine standing at her side.

"Why shouldn't I buy to-day," she cried. "I have had this hundred dollars in gold for almost a year, Mr. McIlwaine, trying to make up my mind what I wanted most; now my birthday is here again, and I am afraid grandpa will make this do for two birthdays, if I don't hurry and spend it."

But Polly's gay little laugh was checked by a look of unmistakable compassion in the gentleman's eyes. The color faded a little from her bright young face, but she would not answer any questions here in the crowded store.

"You may put them back to-day, Mr. West," she said to the jeweler. "I'll come again to-morrow."

"Very well, Miss Rutherford," said the vexed salesman, concealing his disappointment, "I shall reserve them for you."

Polly left the tempting store with Mr. McIlwaine, and once upon the street turned upon him a pair of frank, questioning eyes, which he found hard to answer.

Paul McIlwaine was a friend of the Rutherford family; but not specially of little Polly; she was only sixteen, a mere child to the hard-working lawyer of thirty, and one whom he considered as altogether frivolous and empty. Polly was an only daughter, living with a widowed mother in her grandfather's elegant house, and if she was not a spoiled girl it was not the fault of the doting old grandfather, whose idol she had been from her babyhood.

"What did you mean, Mr. McIlwaine?" she asked, presently, finding that the questioning look brought no reply. And then, seeing how embarrassed he seemed about answering, she said, with a sudden fear, "Have you been at Grandpa's since I left? Is anything the matter?"

"They are all well," he said, answering the thought which he knew was in her mind, "but something has happened, Pollie, of course, or I would not have interfered with your purchase."

"Oh! tell me, tell me," said the girl in an agitated voice. "Why do you keep me in suspense?"

"What a blunderer I am," thought her companion. "If I tell her out here in the street, there will be a scene; but I'm in for it now, and if I don't tell her I suppose there will be a scene; that's the way with these fine young ladies."

"It's a hard thing to say to you, Polly, but your grandfather has failed."

"Failed," repeated Polly, vaguely, "you mean that he has lost his money? Is that all? Is that what you were afraid to tell me?"

"That 'all' means a good deal more than you seem to understand," said Paul McIlwaine, impatiently. "It means loss and grief and disappointment and poverty to one of the best gentleman in the world; it means hard work to your mother who has no strength for work; to you—"

He stopped, and Polly said quickly, feeling the tinge of contempt in his tone: "Never mind about me, but I see now how bad it will be; poor grandpa. Mr. McIlwaine does—must—will anybody else lose by grandpa's failure?"

"It is too soon to say positively," he replied, "but I think not. I think he has quit business in time to leave his creditors without appreciable loss."

Polly's head was up now, and her eyes were shining. "Dear old grandpa," said she, "bless his heart; I am ashamed that I asked the question; I might have known. But oh! I'm so much obliged to you for keeping me from spending my hundred dollars; it was very kind of you, very; I do not know how you came to find me. How long have you known about grandpa?"

"It only came out this morning, and took us all by surprise. But we are at your door; good-bye, my dear. If I can be of service to you in any way, (he had meant to offer her money, but he was suddenly afraid to speak of such a thing to the spirited-looking girl before him,) remember the long intimacy between our families gives me the right to help you."

"Thank you," she said simply; it was all she had voice for, and, using her latch-key, she let herself into the house.

"Bless me!" said the young lawyer, as he walked off, "but the girl has pluck! It was very pretty, and entirely womanly, too, the way she thought of others, her grandfather and the creditors. I didn't think little Polly had it in her."

If he had seen little Polly at this minute, he might not have thought she had so much in her; she had slipped noiselessly into the great handsome front parlor and dropped down on one of the low cushioned divans, "all in a heap," as the girls say. For two whole hours she kept herself hid in the parlor, nobody knowing she was in the house, and in that long, silent time, when she heard only the ticking of the little bronze clock, and her own irregular breathing, something happened to Polly, almost like what happens to the moth when it comes out of the cocoon. It happened to the Polly that was hid away inside of the Polly that everybody knew; and who shall say but that this great, startling change of fortune was not sent to keep the inside Polly from being smothered and dwarfed by the the outside Polly!

When she went to find her mother and grandfather, it was with a bright face and steady voice.

A few days after this, Polly brought up a dainty little breakfast to her mother, who was quite overcome by their disaster, as was the poor old grandfather.

"Come mother," Polly said blithely, "I made these biscuits, and you've got to eat two. What a good thing it was that you had that hobby about teaching me to do things; don't it fit nicely now?"

"It was a theory of your father's," answered her mother, in a depressed tone; "I promised him when you were a wee baby in long clothes that I would have you taught to do everything that woman could do, and of course, after his death, I felt the more bound to do it. But I don't see why you should make so much of it now; you cannot support yourself by making biscuits."

"I don't know," said Polly, carelessly; "I don't know," she repeated more earnestly, springing up and walking about the room as if her mind were not following her footsteps.

In a few weeks the Rutherford's moved into a small down-town house, with all the avilable rooms "let," and poor old Mr. Rutherford was trying feebly to discharge the duties of a small-salaried office into which his friends had put him.

Polly's mother seemed quite crushed at first, but the girl herself was bouyant with hope, as every young girl has a right to be, no matter what her style of living is—or is not.

Thanks to Mr. McIlwaine, she had her hundred dollars now to invest in an enterprise on which she had set her heart far more than it had ever been set on the pearls. And along with the hundred dollars she had also to invest in it youth, health, good sense, a brave spirit, and a proud independence. What else needed she for a proud and successful life?

Her enterprise began with a visit, basket in hand, to seven or eight of the best city hotels, and as many of the restaurants; to all of them she offered a daily, weekly or tri-weekly supply of her dainty little beaten biscuit, such as she had learned to make down in eastern Virginia, from a famous old cook, who had in slave days belonged to her father's family. She was successful almost up to her own expectations, and far beyond her mother's, and her elation could not but infuse some hope into that lady's weak spirit.

"We must have a new name for your biscuit, miss," said one wise old restaurant keeper; "what shall we call them?"

"Call them," said Polly, hesitating and laughing, "call them the Polly-wolly-winkum biscuit."

The Polly-wolly-winkum biscuit got to be the fashion that winter; after hiring one good cook at what seemed ruinous wages, a second and a third had to be engaged; but Polly put on her great kitchen apron, tied up her abundant hair into a high knot, and spent four hours of every day in her kitchen herself; no plea of other engagements, no pretense that the cooks would do as well without her, no tempting offer of sleigh-rides, no flattering invitations of any sort could make the little mistress of the bakery break her rule, or neglect her work. Naturally the biscuit grew in favor.

The last time I visited the Polly-wolly-winkum bakery, it had moved its quarters to a large, well-lighted kitchen, with a class-room attached. Yes, a class-room; for Polly had agreed to teach cooking to a number of rich men's daughters at a good round price per girl, and not to lose the chance of doing good because she was poor, she selected a dozen poor girls, to whom she gave another hour a week, without pay.

Mr. Paul McIlwaine was my cicerone on the occasion of my visit and when I had admired and praised until the English language was exhausted he said gravely:

"Nevertheless a suit is pending in court against the Polly-wolly-winkum bakery; it is charged that Miss Rutherford is dishonestly withholding from all the young gentlemen of her acquaintance the time and thought and interest they believe to be their due."

"That is a dreadful charge, Polly-winkum," said I. "What are you going to do about it?"

"I'll engage Mr. McIlwine to defend me," replied the little bakeress, running to look into an oven. But somehow her face was red even before she opened the oven door.

THE EVILS OF GIFT GIVING.

Sham and show, perplexity, annoyance and extravagance have crept into the custom of gift giving. Though one may make a gift out of the depth of the heart, and do it becomingly and unassumingly, yet it seems as if a dozen influences were bearing on him to force him into a greater expense than he can afford, or to give where he is reluctant to do so, or where he must make a show of the article given. Quiet, unostentatious, spontaneously giving shines brightly, when we find it, amid the dreary heartlessness, the gaudy show and the heartburnings that often accompany the formal giving that is a part of social life.

The reader may call to mind some wedding or birthday anniversary that she is invited to help celebrate. The problem of all problems, even outranking the common "What shall I wear?" then is, "What present shall I send?" It is not enough to go and participate in the social duties and to be cordial in well-wishing and congratulation, for none of us will pardon the neglect or oversight of the gift. There will be the question, "What is Mrs. Jackson's present?" and then the unpleasant comment if she has made none.

So Mrs. Jackson sets out to find some compromise between pride and purse, perhaps poverty, something that costs no more than absolutely compulsory, and yet looks as if it were worth a great deal more, something that the other guests will not look at slightingly, if not speak of contemptuously, or at least think of in the same spirit.

And then the guests compare these proxies of themselves and put themselves on exhibition, after a fashion, about in the same way as they would do, if they were to stand up before a committee of critics and have the style and elegance of their clothing passed upon. The show is at last over, but the jealousies and heartburnings remain, the fear that respectability has been endangered by the insignificance of the gift, or the overtopping consciousness of a few that they each made the best or one of the best presents of the lot.

Afterwards, as is more or less the custom in some parts of the country, the names of the donors and a brief description of their gifts, appear in some newspaper, there to undergo further comparison and criticism and all the train of accompaniments. Finally, if the present was valuable enough, it may find its way to a shop where duplicate presents are bought and sold, so little did the receiver care for the personality of the giver, or of such little use is it to the recipient among several other presents of the same kind.

Gift extortion and compulsory gift making are little less than sinful, if they are short of that. Gifts are by no means always the token of friendship, and when combined with the abuses that are often made to accompany them, they are demoralizing, they are unpleasant features of what take the form of duties, and they are dark spots in social life.

Something is wrong when a present is made a test of social standing, or when it is made the prerequisite for performing a social act. There is an opportunity for reform, when what is apparently a friendly deed, is confessedly empty of honest intent, when it is burdensome, annoying, compulsory, false-hearted, or made for show, or evidence of wealth or merely for social conformity.

The only excuse that one can make for these abuses of gift making, is that their compulsory features have the effect of putting people into the habit of making presents at a time when their friendly feelings have not became strong enough to prompt the act unaided. With the growth of these feelings, the custom gradually gets a better and surer foundation and stands more plainly in harmony with civilization. A gift should be an embodiment of sentiment, from which cost should be totally divorced as an element of weight, and with which no social compulsion should be linked, except the compulsion of a spontaneous expression of feeling. The world is not good enough for this yet, but some attempt, if only a feeble one, if general enough, would be a green oasis in the social desert.

—Good Housekeeping.

MRS. CLEVELAND'S TACT.—The following incident, which, it is said, took place in the green room of the academy of music in Philadelphia last Friday night, and which was only observed by a few persons, will be of interest to Ohio readers. It was upon the occasion of the President's reception, which went far toward demonstrating the womanly tact possessed by the wife of the nation's head. Among the many prominent people present was ex-President Hayes. Naturally of a retiring disposition, he did not mingle to any great extent with the celebrities. When the time arrived for the presidential party to take their places on the stage, they formed in couples, and the ex-President was left without a partner. At this moment the President and Mrs. Cleveland entered the green-room from the proscenium box. Mrs. Cleveland, with womanly instinct, took in the situation at a glance, and in an instant glided across the floor, past the rest of the company, laid her hand upon the ex-President's arm, and took up her position at the head of the line. President Cleveland took Chairman Kasson's arm, and in this order the party filed on the stage. The whole thing was the work of a second, but in that time Mr. Hayes was relieved from an embarrassing position, and Mrs. Cleveland had scored another of those inimitable strokes of fitness for which she is noted.—Washington Letter.

News comes from the town of Clarksville, Ill., that a turkey gobbler stole a guinea hen's nest, hatched out the chicks, and is raising them "with assiduity and care." The old guinea hen would have used grasshoppers and angle-worms.—Lowell Courier.

Auntie's Story.

"Please tell me a story," said Bright Eyes one night,
As she climbed to a place on my knee;
"A real nice story 'bout fairies in white,
And I'll be just as still as can be."

"Shall I tell of a fairy who came one night,
When the leaves had left the trees,
A little red-fisted, bright-eyed mite—
Shall I?" "Oh, Auntie, please."

"She was just the cunningest, cutest speck,
With big dark eyes like sloes,
And the funniest rim of hair at her neck,
And the smallest bit of a nose.

"She crept straight into all our hearts,
The little winsome elf,
I think from elfin land some darts
She brought to help herself.

"As months went by she tried to walk,
And toddle 'round the floor,
And when she first began to talk,
We couldn't love her more.

"She's been with us, now, quite a while,
I think 'tis four years long,
And, oh, she has the brightest smile,
And just the sweetest song.

"I wonder where is she to-night?"
Bright Eyes turned on my knee,
Within her eyes a roguish light—
"Why, Auntie, her is me."

THE LATEST THEORY OF BALDNESS.

What is the cause of the early loss of hair? It is not due to the hats or caps we wear, not to the clipping of the hair close, not to living in hot rooms; it is not due to the forms of foods we consume; but, in our view, it is largely due to modern methods of treatment of the hair and scalp. The erroneous view prevails, that the skin which holds the hair follicles and the delicate secretory organs of the scalp must be kept as "clean," so to speak, as the face or hands; consequently young men patronize barbers or hair-dressers, and once or twice a week they have what is called a "shampoo" operation performed; and this consists in a thorough scouring of the hair and scalp with dilute ammonia, water, and soap, so that a heavy "lather" is produced, and the glandular secretions, which are the natural protection of the hair, and promotive of its growth, are saponified and removed. No act could be more directly destructive of a healthy growth of hair than this and no one is more common.

This practice of frequently washing the head in warm or cold water, at home, with or without the adjuncts of soap, alcohol, ammonia, or perfumery, is deleterious, and promotive of early loss of the hair. Men in active indoor business, clerks, bankers, shop-keepers in cities, are continually washing the head. Many do this night and morning, under the false notion that it is necessary to cleanliness, and promotive of a vigorous growth of hair; and, when alarmed at its rapid disappearance in early life, they are at a loss to understand the reason. The secretion of wax in the ear passages is nature's method of protecting the delicate machinery upon which hearing depends. It closes the organ to the entrance of insects and dust; and fortunately the secretion is, to a considerable extent, placed beyond easy interference, and thus the sense of hearing is protected from injurious "washouts."

The waxy secretion which is poured out from the glandular organs which are found in connection with the follicles of the hair, is nature's product, and is designed to preserve and protect the wonderful and beautiful head-covering. If we persist in removing it altogether, we must march with the bald-pates before the frosts of age come along to change its color. Women do not shampoo or wash the hair as often as the other sex, and consequently they are in a large degree exempt from baldness in middle life. It is true, however, that many women in cities make frequent visits to the hair-dressers, and subject their tresses to the "scouring" process. If this becomes common, it will not be long before baldness will overtake the young mothers as well as the fathers, and the time will be hastened when children even will have no hair to destroy with ammonia or other caustic cosmetics.

The advice we have to offer to young men and maidens is—let your hair alone; keep at a safe distance from hair-dressing rooms and drug shops, where are sold oils, alkaline substances, alcoholic mixtures, etc., for use upon the hair. They are all pernicious, and will do you harm. The head and hair may be washed occasionally with soft, tepid water, without soap of any kind. As a rule, the only appliances needed in the care of the hair are good combs and brushes; and they should not be used harshly, so as to wound the scalp. Avoid all "electric" and wire-made brushes. No electricity can be stored in a hair brush; if it could be, it is not needed. The hair is a beautiful gift of nature, and it must not be destroyed.

TRUTH WELL SPOKEN.—If country newspapers were to publish the names of those who take, read and enjoy, and are gratified by, yet refuse to pay for their home papers, the reputation of most communities for moral honesty would depreciate 20 per cent. An editor's time is seldom esteemed or compensated. A lawyer gives you five minutes' advice on a topic and charges you $5 for it. An editor will give you advice on a hundred topics, and charge five cents a copy for his paper, and very often five cents given to an editor would save five dollars given to a lawyer. In fact no other business men are so universally robbed and swindled out of their labor and capital as country newspaper publishers.—New York Sun.

PUZZLED.

Gilbert Stuart, the painter, was a rare humorist. Once, while he was traveling in a crowded stage-coach in England, his companions, curious to know the man who amused them by his witty remarks, questioned him closely. In those days, gentlemen wore powdered hair tied in queues, and ladies built upon their heads pompatumed top knots. Stuart gravely replied to his first questioner, "I sometimes dress ladies' and gentlemen's hair."

"You are a hair-dresser, then?" said one of the company.

"What! Do you take me for a barber?" exclaimed Stuart, in a serious tone.

"I beg your pardon, but I inferred as much from what you said. May I ask what, then, you are?"

"Why, I sometimes brush a gentleman's coat or hat, or adjust cravats."

"Oh, then you are a valet to some nobleman."

"Indeed, I am not! I am not a servant, though, to be sure, I make coats and waistcoats for gentlemen."

"Oh, you are a tailor."

"Tailor! Do I look like one? I assure you that I never handled a 'goose' that was not roasted."

"What are you, then?" asked half a dozen voices; for by this time all were laughing uproariously.

"I'll tell you," said Stuart. "What I have said is literally true. I dress hair, brush hats and coats, adjust a cravat, and make coats, waistcoats and breeches, and brush also boots and shoes."

"Ha! ha! A boot and shoe maker, after all!"

"Guess again, gentlemen. I never handled boot or shoe save for my own feet. Yet all I have said is true."

"We may as well give up guessing," said one of the company. "He's too much for all of us."

"Now, gentlemen," said Stuart, taking a pinch of snuff, "I'll not play the fool with you any longer. Upon my word of honor, I get my living by making faces." And he then so screwed his countenance that the stage-coach shook with laughter.

"There, just as I thought?" exclaimed one; "the gentleman is a comedian."

"I never was on the stage, and I seldom see the inside of a play-house," answered Stuart.

The mystified company looked at each other with astonishment. Just then the stage-coach stopped at the place where Stuart was to get off.

"Gentlemen," said he, "you will find that all I have said of my various employments is included in these few words: I am a portrait painter. If you will call at my studio in London, I shall be ready to brush you a coat or hat, dress your hair, supply you with a wig of any fashion, accommodate you with coats or shoes, give you ruffles or cravats, and make faces for you."—Youth's Companion.

THE WOMANLY WOMAN.

The sad thing about it is that the girl of the period is making a fool of herself says the New York Mail, "Everything carried to its extreme becomes its contrary," says Hegel, and the girl beginning with the masculine costume goes on to please men more and more by adopting their slang and even their freedom of manner. The girl does not see that. Although men are amused by it, they are not made more respectful and courteous thereby. She only sees that she is a favorite with men, that she always has partners and escorts and is invited everywhere. Men are at their ease with her, but, ye gods and little fishes! there is a mighty difference between the girl one laughs and smokes with and the girl one prefers for a wife or a mother. The very fashion that in moderation was charming, in excess is disagreeable. The slangy, lolling, spralling men-hunters—and some girls of the period are little more than that—have spoiled the liberty which it was delightful to see women accepting in moderation. There is a liberty that makes us free, and a liberty that makes us slaves, and the girls that take liberties with modesty of speech and manner, and who cross well over the border into masculine territory, are not more free, but more slavish than before, and the approbation of men, which is the end in view, is lost by the very means they take to gain it. There is one young woman in Boston who has been a belle for two winters. One day she remarked to the writer that now she was obliged to do the marketing; that her mother had always done it, but "at last ma kicked." When the writer said to a friend of that young woman that she would not get married for several years unless she changed her manners, he was told that she received more attention than any girl in Boston. Nevertheless, that girl has had two seasons and is still disengaged. She is a type of the short-sightedness of some of her sex. She has men about her in plenty, and "she shall have music wherever she goes," but men are better than they appear. At bottom, men love kindliness, gentleness, modesty, purity in act and in thought in woman.

PUSSY'S MYSTERIOUS FATE.—There is a family in this city who have as servants an Irish girl as cook and an English one as second girl. The latter has been but a short time in this country, and has a particular aversion to the family cat, while the feline pet has the good fortune to bask in the sunlight of the cook's favor. For two or three days the cat was missing, and the cook, after hunting everywhere she thought it possible for the animal to be, asked the second girl: "Louisa, you haven't done anything to the cat, have you?" "Done anything to the cat?" repeated the one addressed, "I 'ate it." "Ate the cat," cried the cook in horror,, "Faix, then, I'll give notice to lave immediately, I'll not be under the same roof with a haythen, so I won't."—Boston Budget.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 28, 1887.

MR. LOVERING, the Democratic nominee for governor, is to make a stumping tour of the state.

IT is settled by the supreme court of this commonwealth that detached coupons of railroad mileage tickets are not a legal tender of fare.

THERE is a threatening split in the Knights of Labor, a declaration of independence having been issued by dissatisfied delegates from 13 different states to the recent Minneapolis convention, with an appeal to the rank and file of the order to join them in forming a new organization. They say Powderly is a fraud.

MRS. MARY A. LIVERMORE'S withdrawal from the Republican fold is a real loss to the party, for the influence of a good woman is far-reaching, and always to be desired; but her aspirations may not come to a realization any quicker in the Prohibition party, to which she has turned for refuge, than if she had remained under the old banner.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND returned to Washington last Saturday from his three-weeks' trip through the West and South, during which he traveled 4500 miles, passed through 17 states, and saw and was seen by anywhere from one to five millions of people. It is doubtful if even Barnum, with his greatest show on earth, can beat this record.

NEW YORK CITY Republicans have done an excellent thing in nominating De Lancy Nicoll, the efficient assistant, for district attorney, and following the Democrats in nominating Mr. Martine, the district attorney, for judge of the criminal court. This is a fitting reward for the men who have done such creditable work in bringing the boodlers to justice.

THANKSGIVING DAY, November 24, has been appointed by the president promptly upon his return from his tour, showing that he comes back in a grateful mood. His proclamation is thoroughly devout in sentiment and expression, though some will notice that while the goodness of God the Father is freely recognized, there is no reference whatever to the Son or Holy Spirit.

THE Democratic county convention at Springfield last Saturday nominated Chauncy D. Allen of Westfield for county commissioner, and the senatorial convention which followed nominated Charles C. Spellman of Springfield to compete with Lawyer Lathrop for the Senate. Spellman is rather the handsomer fellow of the two, but we suspect that Mr. Lathrop will get there all the same.

BOSTON Republicans had their annual ratification meeting in Music Hall Monday evening, presided over by Congressman Long, and addressed by ex-Gov. Robinson, Senator Hoar, Henry Cabot Lodge and others. The appearance of ex-Gov. Robinson was the signal for an outburst of enthusiastic and long-continued applause which demonstrated very pleasantly the esteem in which he is held there, as elsewhere in the state. Reference to the plank in the Republican platform concerning the public schools called out tremendous applause, and an allusion to Mr. Blaine elicited a demonstration of surprising warmth.

GEN. BUTLER writes a two-column letter to say that he is going to vote for Mr. Lovering for governor, and to give himself an opportunity to pitch into the Republicans in the style which he enjoys so well. He complains at the oppressiveness of our tax system, scoffs at civil service reform, and does not "believe for one moment in the dodge of local option" in regulating the liquor traffic, wherein he differs from his candidate for the governorship. He is ready to agree "never to drink a glass of intoxicating liquor if every one else would refrain from drinking habitually." That is a safe sort of pledge. The general does not love temperance well enough to forsake his bitters as an encouragement to others to do the same.

THERE was an interesting non-partisan temperance mass meeting at Worcester Tuesday, having for its motto, "The saloon must go." Gov. Ames wrote a cordial approval of the objects of such meetings and hearty accord with the proposition to submit a constitutional prohibitory amendment to the people; Lieut. Gov. Brackett did the same in a guarded way, and advocated rigid enforcement of existing laws; Candidate Lovering expressed the conviction that the best attainable results are to be secured under the local option law; while Candidate Earle is in favor of statutory, constitutional and complete extermination of the manufacture and sale of liquors as a beverage. Rev. Hugh Montgomery said the purpose of these meetings "is to kill the dirty Democrats and put clean ones in office."

Charles G. Francklyn of New York city, formerly the agent of the Cunard Line in that city, has been arrested and lodged in jail in default of $500,000 bail. He is charged with wrongfully converting to his own use $3,000,000. President Garfield died at Francklyn's cottage at Long Branch.

There is considerable apprehension among temperance people lest the supreme court of the United States shall declare prohibitory liquor laws unconstitutional. Seven cases are pending before the court. Two of them come from Kansas, four from Iowa and one from Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. Charles A. Berry of England, who has preached in Plymouth church for two Sundays, is considerably talked of as likely to be Mr. Beecher's successor.

The Fitchburg railroad is credited with a scheme to establish an independent water route to New York, by the way of Troy.

An enthusiastic Memphis citizen who shook hands with the president declares that he will never wash his hands again.

It is reported that Secretary Bayard is soon to marry Miss Sophie D. Markoe, an employe in his department.

Henry M. Jackson, paying teller in the New York sub-treasury, has absconded to Canada with $10,000.

Some move should be made at once to provide the village with a desirable hall in which to hold entertainments this winter.

About 20 ticket were disposed of at this place for the New York excursion over the New London Northern railroad this week.

The Prohibitionists of the 10th Hampden district will hold a representative convention in the district court room to-morrow.

A missionary box was shipped to Wisconsin this week by the Ladies' Aid Society of the Congregational church, valued at $170.

George M. Dimond, formerly employed at this office, is now Boston correspondent of the "Hotel Mail," a New York publication.

Prof. Rich has been giving the local horsemen "points" about shoeing horses the past week, and will return again before long.

It is understood that the Palmer fife and drum corps has passed into history, the same as all other local musical organizations have done.

The carpet mill has been shut down this week, awaiting orders from the new management, but will resume operations some time next week.

The aggregate passenger and freight receipts of the New London Northern Railroad company at this station for the past month were $10,200.

Mrs. C. A. Brown, Mrs. A. Burleigh and J. M. Converse attended the reunion of Raymond excursionists, held at the Revere House, Boston, to-day.

Capen & Monroe succeed J. V. Allen in the Nassowanno broker's office, Mr. Monroe having charge here, and Mr. Capen of a similar office at Spencer.

Rev. H. W. Pope will attend the ordination of C. H. Smith at Belchertown November 1, and is assigned the duty of giving the charge to the pastor.

The Palmer Orchestra is arranging to hold a series of select dances at the Weeks House this winter. The first will probably be held within two weeks.

Charles H. Henkey of Willimantic, Ct., has accepted the position in the American Express Company's office made vacant by F. L. Tuthill's resignation.

Mrs. E. L. Wallace, of St. Paul's choir, has gone to Pittsburg, Penn., where she will participate in several grand orchestral concerts to be given there.

The matter of a dancing school is being agitated among the young people, and providing enough signatures can be obtained a teacher will be secured and a hall engaged.

Quite a number of musicians, would-be musicians, and lovers of music will attend the first grand concert given by the Thomas orchestra at Springfield next Monday evening.

Charles Teague and party, who have returned from a week's hunting trip, report having captured twenty-one partridges, eight gray squirrels and two rabbits. Next.

The Boston and Albany railroad advertises an excursion to the Mechanics' Fair at Boston next Wednesday, the round-trip tickets being $2.60, including admission to the fair.

The farmers in this section will be interested in the next three-days' session of the state board of agriculture, which will be held this year December 6 to 8 inclusive, at the county seat.

The Boston & Albany road ran an excursion to New York city yesterday, allowing those who went to remain in that city until next Monday evening. The fare for the round trip was $5.

Miss Maude Miller, formerly telegraph operator at the union passenger station, has accepted a similar though more lucrative position with the United Lines Telegraph Company at Springfield.

A class for Bible training has been formed by the young people of the Congregational church. Meetings are held semi-monthly, when practical questions are discussed and the text-book thoroughly studied.

A Junior Endeavor society has been organized at the Second Congregational church which admits boys and girls under the age of 14. It is in charge of Rev. H. W. Pope, assisted by Miss Effie Shaw.

Freight is unusually heavy on the line of the New London Northern Railroad, so much so as to necessitate the employment of an extra force of men and a locomotive on the northern division to prevent a blockade.

John Manning, who has transferred the mail from the union station to the post office for some time past, left town unexpectedly last week and is now succeeded by D. B. Collity, who formerly discharged the duties.

The meeting of the Palmer Carpet Company, called yesterday afternoon to elect a treasurer in the place of Mr. Law, resigned, was held at the house of Judge Robinson, the president, and W. C. Dewey was chosen treasurer.

The Sunday-school of St. Paul's Universalist church will not give a harvest concert this season, as was reported. The Ladies' Social Union of the same church will serve a harvest supper on the evening of Nov. 8.

It is expected that the railroad commissioners are to visit Palmer next week and locate the passageway from Main street to the union station. It is earnestly hoped they will verify the report by making their appearance.

The annual concert and ball of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, held at Park street rink last Tuesday evening, was not a financial success, there being a comparatively small attendance on account of the bad weather.

Miss Bertha Marshall, formerly telegraph operator for the Western Union Telegraph Company at this place, has accepted a position at Hartford, Ct., in the office of the American Publishing Company, as stenographer and typewriter.

The work of harvesting the large fields of crops at the state primary school is practically completed, and the yield is considered remarkably good, with the exception of the potato crop, which is acknowledged to be a general failure this year.

At the annual meeting of Palmer Steamer Co. No. 1, Wednesday evening, W. H. Blanchard was elected foreman; M. Dawson, 1st assistant; H. T. Huntington, 2d assistant; W. A. Weld, clerk; J. W. Brainard, treasurer; J. T. Donovan, W. Shaw, A. F. Trask, standing committee.

The Crescent club will meet at the residence of Miss Maude Kenerson on Park street this evening. Several members of the club are working assiduously soliciting funds for the reading room. The citizens should all contribute liberally in order that the institution may be maintained.

It is quite probable that the foundation for the new high school building will be put in this fall. The work of constructing the edifice will then be deferred until next spring. The committee in charge of this matter intend to push the work of construction as rapidly as practicable.

The JOURNAL office receives orders for tickets to the Thomas concert in Springfield next Monday evening. There are a few good seats left, and Mr. Lane will try and fill orders left here before Monday noon. A special train will leave Springfield at 10.30, immediately after the concert.

The condition of Judge Robinson, who met with a serious accident recently, is steadily improving. Many of the Royal Arcanum societies in different parts of the state, of which he is grand orator, have passed resolutions expressing sympathy and regret for the misfortune which befell him.

Hunting parties are seen on the streets of the village daily, generally without game, though. Two newspaper "scribes" who scoured the woods nearly all one day, recently, in search of the birds, came home and rendered a verdict to the effect that it requires an expert marksman to bag many partridges.

The Patterson club resumed its meetings for the winter Tuesday evening at the residence of Mrs. Frank Lawton on Park street. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Dr. E. E. Hill; vice president, Miss Mina Ball; secretary, Miss Ida Smith; treasurer, Miss Helen L. Robinson.

"Leck" Wade, of Ludlow, was found in the immediate vicinity of the Point of Rocks Tuesday evening, where he had been thrown from his wagon down the embankment, lying in a critical condition with his leg broken. The accident is said to have been due to intoxication, and caused by driving the horse off the embankment.

A "baby reception" was held at the residence of S. H. Hellyar on Thorndike street Wednesday afternoon, several of the alleged "best babies in town" being on exhibition. At last accounts the judges had not determined which of the number won first prize for its beauty, and the indications are that the matter will have to be determined by arbitration.

The sprint running on the park last Saturday by P. J. Murphy of North Wilbraham was witnessed by a comparatively small number of people. The race was to run a distance of 100 yards in less than 10¼ seconds, to decide a wager of $500. There were five timers for the event, three watches recording 10 seconds as the exact time made. It is stated that considerable money changed hands.

Little is said about the representative question as yet, but the nomination will probably go to Ludlow, and Charles F. Grosvenor is talked of as likely to be the coming man. Mr. Grosvenor is a prominent citizen and level-headed business man of that town, and his nomination would give general satisfaction to the district. The convention meets here in the district court room next Friday at 10 a. m.

Palmer will probably put an excellent base ball team into the field next season, which will join the Western Massachusetts league, which the leading base ball enthusiasts contemplate forming. D. F. Holden will probably resume the management of the nine, and has already practically determined upon its composition. An efficient battery will be secured to start with, while the remaining players will be local.

Arrangements are nearly perfected for the camp-fire to be held by L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R., in Union Hall next Wednesday evening. The entertainment will be musical and literary, with reminiscences of the war included. A committee consisting of C. P. Stone, E. A. Kirk, G. O. Henry, C. W. Cross and George Mills from the post, and Mrs. C. K. Gamwell, Miss Effie Stone, Miss Georgia Packard, Mrs. F. R. Lawton and Mrs. W. C. Hitchcock, from the Woman's Relief Corps, have the matter in charge.

One of the enthusiastic citizens who is a lover of base ball has been endeavoring to arrange for a match game between the Palmers and Bostons. Manager Morrill of the latter team gave the Palmers a date a short time ago which was not accepted owing to the fact that the local base ball season had terminated and the players were not all obtainable, but a date will probably be arranged soon. Providing the game is arranged there are stipulations to the effect that the "$10,000 Kelley" shall be present and "toss the sphere" with his other associates. This is arranged so that the people may have an opportunity to see one of the most efficient ball players in the country. It is proposed to secure a pitcher from outside the town, while Green of the Thorndikes will catch.

The Democrats of the town are unusually enthusiastic at present over the proposition of holding a demonstration prior to election day in favor of Lovering and Cutting, the Democratic standard bearers. It is proposed now to arrange a programme similar to the one which was so successfully carried out four years ago, which included a torch-light procession and illumination of stores and private residences of Democratic citizens. A meeting will be held at the town house next Monday evening at 7.30 o'clock, when all those residing in the different villages of the town who are interested in the affair are expected to be in attendance and take some definite action upon matters pertaining thereto. Committees will be appointed and plans devised, if enough interest is then manifested.

The store of J. Simmons, in the Nassowanno House block on Main street, was entered last Saturday morning by a gang of burglars, who effected an entrance by opening the front door with false keys. The present condition of the lock does not indicate that it required much skill to operate it, therefore no one believes that it was the work of professional burglars. It is estimated that the thieves escaped with from $25 to $50 worth of clothing and furnishing goods, but whether there are goods enough missing to exceed that loss Mr. Simmons is unable to state, and furthermore cannot render a definite statement until after an inventory has been taken of the stock. No information whatever has been obtained relative to the party implicated in the matter, but suspicions as to the exact ones are getting to be well established.

LUDLOW.

Ransom Morse of Spencer is in town.

The concert given in the Union church last Sunday evening was in every way a success.

Some of the village schools have been closed to-day to enable the teachers to visit other schools.

Prof. Anderson, "The Wizard of the North," drew a large company of school children Wednesday afternoon to his entertainment in Joy's hall.

WEST WARREN.

G. H. Perkins of Westfield was in the village a short time Monday.

Eugene M. Johnson has leased the Rycroft house on Main street, and will move to it in a few days.

The delegates from this village to the representative convention at West Brookfield are: George Bliss, E. T. Hall, Milton Dickson and Rev. G. H. Moss.

The lockup is receiving extensive repairs at the hands of Stephen Norton. The whole interior has been torn out and the two cells located differently, so as to give more space for the tramp room.

J. C. Hill of Chicopee is putting in a large amount of concrete sidewalk in this part of the town. New walks have been made around the brick school house, and on School street, and a long stretch has been laid on South street.

The Methodist and Congregational churches have been holding union services four days this week, Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons and evenings at the Congregational church, and Thursday and Friday in the Methodist church.

WILBRAHAM.

Dr. Carl Schofield and wife of Boston, returned to their home Monday.

Some of the public school teachers took Wednesday to visit schools in Springfield.

The farm of the late Miss Angelina Woodward will be sold at public auction next Monday.

The Willing Workers met at the Congregational parsonage Wednesday afternoon and evening.

Miss Florence Rogers of Willimantic, Ct., has been the guest of Miss Ida Bowles the past few days.

There will be a Prohibition rally in Fisk Hall next Tuesday evening, with an address by Rev. A. A. Miner of Boston.

The funeral of Samuel Warner, son of the late Frank Warner, was largely attended at the Congregational church Tuesday afternoon. The bicycle club from West Brookfield, of which he was a member, attended in a body, bringing a beautiful wreath of flowers, also the Sons of Temperance from the same place, of which he was a member, was represented, bringing a beautiful floral design.

WALES.

Fresco Hulett, the painter, has a large contract of painting in Monson.

Prof. C. C. Smith, and a corps of assistants, have recently painted the numerous buildings owned by E. W. Royce, M. D.

Austin Parker, a son of the late Luther Parker, has been in town this week visiting his brother, William G. Parker. Mr. Parker is from Kansas, where he has been for a number of years, doing a very profitable business.

The Wales stage has again changed owners, George W. Dimmick of this town having bought the line from J. A. Palmer. Albert F. Pepper, the careful and genial driver, will still continue to handle the ribbons, much to the satisfaction of the public.

Willard Dimmick, who is something in the way of a celebrated agriculturist, has raised this season on a plot of ground three rods square, 50 bushes nice turnips. He had 15 French turnips that filled a large barrel. The "Stewart" farm, of which Mr. Dimmick is manager, is showing some very decided improvements in nice stone walls, and a dam is in process of construction that will enable him to irrigate different portions of the farm.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

E. H. Cutler has returned to Dakota, his little daughter having nearly recovered from her sickness.

The caucus at Wilbraham Monday evening to nominate delegates to the 9th district representative convention, was one of the largest ever held in town, 116 votes being cast. From the fact that the north end of the town had not had a representative for about thirty years, it was thought a good time to present a candidate, and a list of delegates favorable to Jason Butler was presented. The south end did not admit the claim, and elected delegates favorable to Henry Clark, by three or four majority. Our voters claimed that more than that number voted for them who belonged to other parties and they came home with fire in their eyes. Another caucus was called Wednesday evening and a contesting delegation chosen, but the convention admitted the delegates from the first caucus and nominated Henry Clark. It is doubtful if he can carry Wilbraham, but the rest of the district is expected to pull him through. The old saying, "every man has his price," has been outdone. A prominent Republican of the south end came to voters of the other side and told them they could have the representative if they would give them a $6000 town hall. This seemed pretty cheap for half a town, but there were no takers.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

Miss Jennie Eastman has gone to Bellows Falls, Vt., for a week or two.

George Allen has been promoted to the position of section foreman at this place, taking the place of J. P. Eastman, promoted.

C. L. Alexander is about ready to burn a kiln of brick of 16 arches, which will close up his business for this season. He has made about two million bricks this year, and the demand has been very good.

Our noted sportman, W. E. Holland, has gone to Old Furnace, as agent of the Boston and Albady road for two weeks. Foxes must keep out of sight while he is there. He left many sad hearts when he went away.

J. P. Eastman has been promoted to the position of assistant to P. M. Butler, the division roadmaster of the Boston and Albany road. Mr. Eastman will have charge of the Ware River branch this winter.

About 50 friends and neighbors met at the house of J. W. Lawrence Thursday evening of last week to enjoy an old-fashioned husking. The barn was well illuminated, and judging from the frequent "catch as catch can" races, red ears were numerous. After the husking a substantial lunch was provided, and the affair wound up with a dance at Mr. Sherman's vacant house near by. About 125 bushels of corn were husked.

WARREN.

The Christian Endeavor Society have a sociable in the ladies' parlors this evening.

The Woman's Temperance Union met with Mrs. Shumway Thursday afternoon.

The Lend-a-Hand society met at the parsonage Tuesday afternoon. They propose to have a fair in November.

A son of Stephen Avery had his foot crushed by jumping off a freight train last week. Dr. J. W. Hastings was called and found amputation necessary.

Mr. Sawyer of Baldwinsville has leased the Warren hotel, formerly kept by Mr. Sturtevant. His former success warrants him a liberal patronage of the people in town.

The Home Missionary Society has re-organized for the year by choosing the following officers: Mrs. Fairbanks, president; Mrs. Shumway, vice president; Mrs. Hastings, secretary; Mrs. Hitchcock, treasurer.

The moulders of the steam pump shop will have a concert and ball to-night, in the town hall. Brigham's orchestra of Marlboro will furnish the music. Concert at eight o'clock, grand march at nine o'clock.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union has chosen the following officers for the year: Mrs. Goodhue, president; Mrs. E. Shumway, vice president; Mrs. A. E. Warren, secretary; Mrs. Moody, treasurer.

Henry Moore has sold his residence on Main street to Miss Keeney of South Warren, and purchased a lot on Southbridge street of H. Shepard, and will put up a house this winter. Building seems to be at its height, as there are over twenty houses being built at the present time.

THREE RIVERS.

A. M. Butterfield's store is receiving a fresh coat of paint.

Mrs. E. H. Cutler of West Boylston is the guest of her son, E. W. Cutler.

N. K. Rogers is improving the looks of his block by the addition of a piazza.

The French Catholic society is building a very handsome parsonage on the lot just west of their church.

Henry Rivers, an employe of Trudeau & Rivers, while getting on his wagon last Saturday, fell, injuring him quite badly.

Robert Cameron, formerly in the employ of Trudeau & Rivers, has opened a meat and provision market in the basement of Howard's block.

Next Sunday will be observed in the Baptist church as Harvest Sunday. There will be appropriate services in the morning, and a harvest concert by the Sunday-school in the evening.

Burglars entered the store of Shaw Bros. Saturday night, securing as a reward for their labor pennies to the amount of $1, two keys and a watch. Friday night some one entered the shop of Grise Bros., but only obtained a few pennies. No doubt it is the same parties who have recently been visiting other places.

John Rivers, of the firm of Trudeau & Rivers, pleasantly observed the 25th anniversary of his marriage, by a reception at his home in Indian Orchard Tuesday evening. Quite a delegation of his friends from the village attended, and all passed a very pleasant evening.

Joseph Garant, son of our local tonsorial artist, and Envilie, daughter of Francois Gauthier, were married at St. Ann's church Monday afternoon, Rev. A. Lamy officiating. Miss Carrie Garant acted as bridesmaid and William King as best man. A reception was held at the home of the bride Monday evening, and a ball was given for them by an uncle of the groom, at the Bondsville hotel, Thursday evening.

THORNDIKE.

James Loftus lost a horse last Monday afternoon from overeating apples.

The Bondsville brass band is to give a grand ball at Union Hall this evening.

J. S. Brooks and wife of Moodus, Ct., are visiting their daughter, Mrs. S. S. Carter.

Agent Greene is putting in several new spinning frames at the No. 2 mill. They are from Forbes & Jenks, Pawtucket, R. I.

A very pleasant wedding took place here last Wednesday afternoon, when D. Flynn, formerly of this place, but now of Westfield, was united in marriage to Miss Mary McKelliget.

Mrs. J. Sugrue was very badly bitten by a large dog last Tuesday, her left arm being badly torn above the elbow. Drs. Holbrook and Flynn were sent for, and she is doing as well as could be expected.

The house of Charles Plummer was broken into last week Thursday, and a pocket book containing money and valuable papers was taken. The pocket book and money has been returned, but the papers are still missing.

Rev. W. G. Tuttle, for more than a quarter of a century pastor at Ware Center, preached at the Congregational church in Thorndike last Sunday. The Sunday-school concert in the evening was fully attended, and was highly interesting and profitable.

Confirmation services will be held at St. Mary's church on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock by Bishop O'Reilly of Springfield. Several priests will take part in the ceremony, and a special program of music has been arranged for the occasion by the organist.

The Thorndike base ball club has decided to hold its dance Thanksgiving Eve. Merritt, who has played 2d base for the home team this season, has gone to North Adams to work. The club means to keep together if possible during the winter, and will be ready to start playing early in the spring. There is talk of getting up a league between the different local clubs for 1888, and if so the boys will go in and try and secure a first class nine for the coming season.

MONSON.

Democratic caucus this evening.

Fred Webber has sold his house on Main street to John Corcoran.

S. F. Cushman has purchased the Henry Chapin property on Lyon street.

The Dorcas Society met with Mrs. George Norcross Wednesday afternoon.

Rev. F. S. Hatch has accepted the call given him by the Congregational church.

C. H. Bruce, who recently moved here from Palmer, is quite ill with typhoid fever.

H. Chapin, G. A. R. inspector, will inspect the post at Warren next Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Oliver Hyde of New York is spending a few days with her sister, Mrs. A. G. Chapman.

The Ladies' Sewing Circle of the Universalist church met with Mrs. Orrin Shaw last Friday afternoon.

The real estate of the late Henry E. Aldrich was sold at auction on last Saturday to Mr. Lanphear.

The marriage boom has struck town in real earnest, the old as well as the young yielding to its mighty power.

Rev. Dr. Gould, who preached at the Congregational church last Sunday, graduated from the academy in '46.

G. L. Fuller of the Monson boot and shoe store, is in Boston this week making purchases for his winter trade.

Regular meeting of the Grand Army next Monday night, when Commander Meacham is expected to relate some of his army experiences.

The present selectmen have perfected the improvements at the cemetery, begun by the former board, and the place now presents a very pleasing appearance.

At the Union Association of Universalists to be held at Warren next Tuesday and Wednesday, Rev. Mr. Priest of this place will speak on "The dangerous classes and how to improve them."

Verily, verily, youth must have continual excitement! Now that the base ball season is ended, a dancing school is on the tapis. "No gray heads, no bald heads, no married folks" need apply.

Rev. Mr. Priest will preach a sermon next Sunday morning in Central Hall, especially for the non-church going people, although regular attendants will no doubt receive some benefit from the discourse.

Owing to the illness of Rev. J. H. Emerson, Rev. William Gordon of Wales occupied the pulpit of the M. E. church last Sunday morning. The Sunday-school gave a harvest supper and glad-tidings concert in the evening.

Friends of the Howland children will be glad to learn that they have found homes where doubtless they will be well cared for. Two go to Rev. Mr. Blake's in New London, Conn., and one to Rev. Mr. Arms's at Sunderland.

Monson members of the third party have begun to "buckle on their armor and sally forth to war," at least as far as words are concerned. Wednesday evening Rev. Alex. Dight, formerly of this place, gave a very interesting address in favor of prohibition, and next Tuesday evening there will be a grand rally at Memorial Hall, when William H. Earle of Worcester, the Prohibitory candidate for governor, will speak, also Dr. John Blackmer of Springfield. The subject is "How to save the boys; how to banish the saloons.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Charlie Dorion leaves Ware next week to attend the French Protestant college at Lowell.

J. C. Dexter has secured the services of Alphonse Gaouette to assist him in his photograph rooms.

There was a man in town from Stafford Springs Wednesday, looking over the ground for a domestic bakery.

The room lately used as a doctor's office in Gray's block has been rented to the Owls for the season, which society has been reorganized with seventeen members.

The Otis Company have given the contract to C. W. Mead of Chicopee to put in 1000 yards of concrete on their premises. This includes a floor to the new weave shed.

Isaac Jeffries moved into his new house on Church street this week. It is fitted up with all modern improvements, hot and cold water, steam heaters with radiators in each room.

F. A. Smith of Colchester, Conn., has bought the Oriental Tea Store of C. W. Wright, who had owned it but a few days. Mr. Smith will make a specialty of fine teas and coffees.

W. M. Winter is to at once erect a building on West Main street, where he will open undertaking rooms, with a stock of coffins and caskets. He has been to the city and taken instructions in embalming and all other parts of the business.

The Republican caucus Monday evening was not largely attended, and there seemed to be but little interest, as there was but one ticket in the field. Henry C. Davis, Levi W. Robinson and Dr. David W. Miner were elected delegates to the senatorial covention.

Next Friday evening the hall is engaged by the Fitzpatrick Family, who give a varied entertainment consisting of songs, comedies, etc. Martin J. Fitzpatrick was one of our Ware boys before he went on the stage, and seems to enjoy visiting his old home and friends in town.

Mrs. Henry F. Ross of Newtonville, daughter of Daniel Sanford of this town, has bought a lot on the Peter Harper farm, known as the Fisherdick Hill, which is the highest point of land in Ware, being over 800 feet above the level of the sea. The view from this point is magnificent, overlooking on the west the villages of Enfield and Belchertown, and in full view of Mount Holyoke, Mount Tom, and the famous Berkshire Hills and mountain ranges to the north and west. To the south is the Palmer valley and Wilbraham, and on the east is seen the upper part of Ware village, and a great extent of country beyond. Mr. Ross is a noted builder, and it is expected that at no distant day there will be a summer residence erected there that will be worthy of the spot.

ST. WILLIAM'S FAIR.

The fair for the benefit of St. William's church has continued this week with even more success than at first. The articles on the several tables are of the finest quality, and are temptingly displayed to those who are willing to put their names on the several books, risking the chance to become the owners of them. The entertainment on Monday evening was the pantomime of "The Wood Demon," which was much enjoyed. Tuesday evening the juvenile operetta "Poor Henry" was repeated. The children who took part deserve especial mention, as they were all excellent. Little Johnnie Kennedy as "Poor Henry" rendered his parts and songs so clear and distinct that every word could be heard in the gallery, something that could not be said of some of his elders. Fifteen dollars was taken for seats in the gallery during the operetta. Wednesday evening there was singing and tableaux, and on Thursday and Friday evenings there were entertainments by the Fitzpatrick Family. Martin J. Fitzpatrick was formerly a Ware boy, and is now one of the best of comedians. New attractions have been added continually, so there has been something new to see this week. Among them is the Gypsy tent, with fortune telling, which has proved a success, and the "Old Woman who lived in her shoe, she had so many children she didn't know what to do," but the one represented by little Abbie Corkery knew just what to do, that is sell some of them and so reduce the stock. The canvassers with their books are numerous, and as but few go to the fair at all but for the purpose of giving, they are well patronized. Below we give a list of the prizes awarded up to date:

Delph set, Miss Nellie Graham; artistic clock, P. E. Grey; handsome tidy, James S. Clark; silver table castor, Edward St. Onge; meerschaum pipe, M. McHugh of Worcester; silver cake basket, Cornelius Walsh; gent's silk hat, Amos D. Crowe.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Oct. 26, 1887.

It is a day of encouragement all around to-day at the political headquarters. The Republicans are much pleased with the great success of their rally in Music Hall Monday evening, and all the more so because it was in such contrast with the fizzle of the Democrats in Faneuil Hall a week ago to-night. To-day Chairman Burden of the Republican state committee tells me that the outlook is encouraging all along the line, and he has no doubt that the Republican state ticket is entirely safe.

The Republicans need more money for the prosecution of an efficient campaign, but their organization is going to serve them in good stead in all the cities and towns of the state. Some reliance is also placed at headquarters upon the union of the mugwumps with the Republicans. The argument is that when they see what efforts the Democrats are making and how large a vote, and when they realize what the Democratic candidate on the Democratic platform really means, they will come to the support of Ames, and thus reverse the position in which they stood in the last campaign.

Doubtless this is all true, but the signs at the Democratic headquarters show more clearly than ever that they are doing their best to get out a large vote. Secretary Alger this morning had before him a big pile of letters,—a sample of what he is receiving by the quantity nowadays,—from different towns of the state, saying what the registration is, how many names have been left off from the list, for what reason, how many can be put on and how much money is wanted for the purpose. It is said, with apparent truth, that the Democrats have never made so systematic and thorough a canvass of the state as they have this year. They appear to be pushing the business part of the campaign more than the Republicans are, though they may not be making so many speeches. Certainly they seem to have money enough, and to be more confident than usual. More visitors were in their headquarters to-day than at the Republicans', three times as many, and these visitors come from all parts of the state, as well as from Boston and vicinity. One thing that is very significant is the large increase in registration in Boston. The lists closed last night, and the result is that there are over 60,000 voters registered in Boston. Fewer names were left off than last year, and more names have been added. In spite of the British-American movement, the Democrats have made more out of the registration than have the Republicans, and it is admitted at the Republican headquarters to-day that the Democratic majority in Boston will be several thousand larger than it was last year.

This means that the state outside of Boston will have to come out more than usual, if the result of last year is to be maintained. But when it comes to that part, the Prohibitionists have to be considered. At their headquarters to-day they are far more confident than ever, and now say that they will have from 12,000 to 15,000 votes. Mrs. Livermore's desertion of the Republicans and enlistment with the Prohibitionists, they say, has had a marked effect to brace up the third party. I had a talk to-day with one of their candidates on the state ticket, and he said that the danger of Mr. Ames's defeat, should any appear, would not deter many of the Prohibitionists from voting for Earle; it was the duty of the third party to defeat the Republicans, if possible, even by helping the election of Lovering, for the Republicans are the greatest obstacle in the way of Prohibition, and should first of all be defeated. He really meant what he said, though outwardly he had the appearance of a reasonable being. At the Republican headquarters it is not believed that the Prohibitory vote will be over 10,000. So it is said to-day in spite of the third party confidence.

One subject there is which is of deep interest, and I am surprised to find constant evidences of an extreme sensitiveness of public opinion. That is the public school question. In private conversation I hear it mentioned often, and ex-Governor Robinson's allusions to it in his speech Monday evening were vigorously cheered. On the same evening the Boston Congregational club had up for discussion the relation of church and state in the education of children and youth. Prof. W. T. Harris of Concord was the leading speaker, and though he did not refer to parochial schools by name, yet he did refer to them so pointedly that none could mistake his position. It was my privilege to hear him, and the temper of the gathering showed how keen is the interest in the question how far the Catholic school system shall cut across ours. In a private way, too, I happen to know of other things showing that the Catholics are pushing forward so as to get more and more control of the public schools, and if there is any patriotism in the breasts of those who are otherwise indifferent in politics, it ought to be awakened by this most important issue. It is an issue which has got into politics and, unless I am mistaken, will be a feature in politics until the eternal aggression of the church of Rome against the liberties of this country is finally and confessedly checked. It is a great pity that the issue is here. But it has been forced upon us and we have got to meet it. Many Catholics do not go with their priests, but with their priests over them, who will dare to trust them?

From what I gather here about the Knights of Labor, it is sure that they are passing through a great crisis. The order cannot go on as it is. Whether it will live or die depends on the turn things take.

SOME QUESTIONS ANSWERED ABOUT THE TORTILITA MINES.

Since the recent article descriptive of the great Tortilita Gold and Silver Mining Company and their properties in Arizona appeared in the Evening Post, the publishers of that paper have been deluged with inquiries from all parts of the country, concerning the integrity of the company and with requests for "inside information" respecting the value of the company's property. It is probably neither singular nor strange that the average newspaper reader should inquire closely into enterprises which offer such remarkable advantages as the Tortilita company presents, and we are glad to be able to re-assure all inquirers and others interested in this interesting subject.

The publishers of the Post enjoy a personal acquaintance with Mr. Joseph H. Reall, president and active manager of the Tortilita Gold and Silver Mining Company, and know him to be an able and honorable gentleman. We have had business transactions, first and last, with the Tortilita company, through Mr. Reall, amounting in the aggregate to many hundreds of dollars, and his obligations to us have always been paid to the last dollar. We have the fullest confidence in his integrity and ability, either personally or representing the Tortilita company, to perform faithfully whatever contract he may seek to make.

In regard to the company's mining properties there is no "inside information" to give. The facts are all known. The Tortilita group of mines contains a vast deposit of gold and silver ore. They have for some time been under development in a small way; that is, with two or three hand-windlasses and a five-stamp mill. In this crude way they have produced enough of the precious metals to more than pay all expenses and prove their great value. The company is now contracting for the introduction of suitable hoisting machinery, and negotiating for the purchase of two or three twenty-stamp mills, which will multiply the present producing capacity of the mines ten times without largely increasing expenses. To pay for these important and extensive improvements, they are selling a given quantity of stock—a sensible and wise proceeding.

The management of the Tortilita have introduced a new feature in marketing mining stock, by giving their enterprise the widest publicity through the press, and thus courting the closest investigation of their property. The practicability of this and the wisdom of their course is apparent, as the shares are only offered by subscription for investment.

This is all that can or need be said about it—except that the company will be making five or six thousand dollars a day as soon as they get their fifty or sixty stamps in operation, and that then the company's stock will probably be obtainable only for many times the price that it is on the market for to-day.

This brief statement, made without the knowledge of the company, is a concise answer to the average letter of inquiry which reaches the office of THE POST by every mail. If its publication proves useful to the public or the Tortilita company, we shall be very glad, and both are quite welcome to any benefits which may accrue.

—Hartford (Conn.) Post., Sept. 19, 1887.

The shares in the Tortilita Gold and Silver Mining Company are two dollars each, in any sized lots, and are based on proven and developed property worth many times their value.

RENEWS HER YOUTH.

Mrs. Phœbe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." IN BRIEF, AND TO THE POINT.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existence. It is easy to put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Greens August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents. 2

"Nothin' Ter Say."

[With Apologies to James Whitcombe Riley and to the Century.]

Nothin' ter say, Mirandy? tho' yer biscuits hev got the croup;
Nothin' ter say, Mirandy? while the butter's a reg'lar soup;
D'ye think yer father fancies a sausage what's half pock-marked?
When I spoke on it this minute it act'ally wriggled and barked.
This tarnal coffee's chokin', an' tastes like a sulphur match,
I reckon them eggs in the slap-jacks wur a'most ready ter hatch.

Nothin' ter say, Mirandy? D'ye want ter kill yer dad?
Is I a thrashin'machine, ter swallow th' good or bad?
Yer mar wur good at cookin', 'twar act'ally bread o' hern,
But now her only remnants lies under a marble urn;
An' when I think o' her dumplings my head I slowly shakes,
An' wonder whether she's baking, until my bosom quakes.

Yer wants ter marry, Mirandy? yer wants ter yoke with a mate?
Yer hev missed the express, I reckon, an's willin' ter go by freight;
An' yer looks jest like yer mar, gyurl—red-haired, an' so cross-eyed
Th' tears ran daown her checks whenever she softly cried.
But thar! I'm through exhortin'; I'll go an' git in the hay;
Gol darn yer skin, Mirandy! ain't yer got nothin' ter say?

What it's the boarder wants yer? that chap in the "City Bank?"
How did you work it, daughter? Them thar is the kind ter yank.
Yer mar wur a skittish critter, an' you takes arter yer mar.
But it ain't by freight yer going; ye'll ride in a parlur car.
I'll jest run down to th' parsons an' tie you two ter day;
That wor a ketch, Mirandy; an' I ain't got nothin' ter say.

POND'S EXTRACT

VEGETABLE

PAIN DESTROYER.

Hemorrhages. Bleeding from the LUNGS, stomach, nose or from any cause is speedily controlled and stopped.

Sores, Ulcers, Wounds, Sprains and Bruises. It is cooling, cleansing and HEALING.

Catarrh. It is most efficacious for this disease, cold in the head, etc. POND'S EXTRACT CATARRH CURE, specially prepared to meet serious cases, should be applied with Pond's Extract Nasal Syringe.

Rheumatism, Neuralgia. No other preparation has cured more cases of these distressing complaints than the extract. POND'S EXTRACT PLASTER is invaluable in these diseases, Lumbago, Pains in the Back or Side, Etc.

Diphtheria, Sore Throat, use the EXTRACT promptly. Delay is dangerous.

Piles, Blind, Bleeding or Itching. It is the greatest known remedy; rapidly curing when other medicines have failed. POND'S EXTRACT OINTMENT is of great service where the removal of clothing is inconvenient.

For Broken Breast and Sore Nipples. Mothers who have once used The Extract will never be without it. Pond's Extract Ointment is the best emollient that can be applied.

Female Complaints. In the majority of female diseases The Extract can be used, as is well known, with the greatest benefit. Full directions accompany each bottle.

CAUTION.—POND'S EXTRACT has been imitated. The genuine has the words "POND'S EXTRACT" blown in the glass, and our picture trade-mark on surrounding buff wrapper. None other is genuine. Always insist on having Pond's Extract. Take no other preparation. It is never sold by bulk or by measure.

THORN'S

Hop and Burdock Tonic

STANDS AT THE HEAD OF ALL

SARSAPARILLAS, BITTERS, TONICS,

And Similar Preparations.

It is prepared with the greatest care by I. B. Thorn, who has had twenty years of acutal experience in compounding Physicians' prescriptions, and is warranted not to contain a particle of aloes or any injurious drug.

It is composed of Sarsaparilla Root, Burdock Root, Prickly Ash Bark, Mandrake Root, Golden Seal Root, Dandelion Root and the best Northern grown Hops, the proportions of which when properly combined make the best preparation in existance for curing all blood diseases.

It is the Best Tonic and Invigorator, as Hundreds can Testify.

It cures Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, General Debility, Mental and Physical Exhaustion, and Nervous Prostration.

There is no other preparation like it, and no other that has had the sale in so short a time. Its merits have sold nearly Seventeen Thousand Bottles in the last two years.

SULPHUR BITTERS

THE BEST AND PUREST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

TRUTHS FOR THE SICK.

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those Pimples and Blotches which mar your beauty are caused by impure blood, and can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS.

What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle, soothing DON'T tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. GIVE Sulphur Bitters is NOT a cheap rum or poor whisky drink, to be taken by the UP! glass, like other preparations, which stimulate only to destroy. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible headache? Why lay and toss on that bed of pain with rheumatism?

If you have failed to receive any benefit from other medicines or doctors, do not despair. Use Sulphur Bitters. They will cure you when all others fail. No person can remain long sick who uses SULPHUR BITTERS.

The dose is small—only a teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied. Get it of your druggist. Don't wait, get it at once. If you are suffering from Kidney Disease, and wish to live to old age, use Sulphur Bitters. They never fail to cure. SULPHUR BITTERS.

Send three 2-cent stamps to A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass., for best medical work published, finely illustrated with colored plates from life. 3

LACE DEPARTMENT.

GREAT SALE OF BLACK LACES.

This lot of Black Laces which we offer at such a terrific reduction from former prices was purchased from a large importer to clean up his spring stock before he opened his fall goods. We bought nearly $500 (Five Hundred Dollars) worth for $100 (One Hundred Dollars). We have put the entire lot on sale at 6¼ cents. None of the patterns was sold for less than 25c. up to 50c. We also offer a lot of

Fine Ornamental Laces at 15 cents. Never sold for less than 37½c. to 50c. In the purchase were 400 pieces

Wide Hamburgs Which we offer at 25 cents. The goods would bring in New York 37½ cents wholesale.

This is a Great Bargain.

SILK & VELVET DEPARTMENT.

We shall open this week our Fall Importation of SILKS AND VELVETS, without any doubt the largest assortment we have ever had the pleasure of offering to the Springfield public, and at prices much under Spring. Ladies who desire a BLACK SILK DRESS that will wear and give entire satisfaction, should call and examine those beautiful Black Rhadames, of our own importation, a make of goods which we warrant to our customers for six months. ELEGANT ASSORTMENT OF COLORED RHADAMES AT $1. Same quality sold in New York at $1.25 by one of the largest retail houses. BLACK AND COLORED FAILLES in all the most desirable shades for street and evening wear. The best value in the country at $1.25. Examine our stock of Silks before you make a purchase. We are positive we can save you money every time. Making our purchases direct with the manufacturers, we save the jobber's profit.

HOSIERY DEPARTMENT.

We beg to announce to the ladies of Springfield and vicinity that we shall offer the largest assortment of Foreign and Domestic Hosiery ever shown in this city. Our stock will embrace products of the best English, French and German manufactures, having been selected with special care that we should have nothing but goods suitable for first class trade. We shall also offer an immense stock of Ladies', Men's and Children's Merino and Wool Underwear, in all qualities, from the cheapest up to the finest goods imported. As a special bargain we shall offer about 75 dozen Ladies' and Men's Underwear from one of the best manufacturers. This was their entire stock of odds and ends, after the season's business. We offer a lot at $1 each, worth $1.50 to $3. We offer a lot of Men's Jersey Shirts, Double back and front. This is a lot of shirts that was made for the California market, and is just the thing for men that are at work out of doors. Every expressman should examine this shirt. After they are gone no more can be had in this market. We offer them at $1.50, which is just half-price.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer as demonstrations of the unequalled excellency of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century. A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

Judge Not.

How do we know what hearts have vilest sin?
How do we know?
Many, like sepulchers, are foul within
Whose outward garb is spotless as the snow,
And many may be pure we think not so.
How near to God the souls of such have been,
What mercy secret penitence may win—
How do we know?

How can we tell who hath sinned more than we?
How can we tell?
We think our brother has walked guiltily,
Judging him in self-righteousness. Ah well!
Perhaps, had we been driven through the hell
Of his untold temptations, we might be Less upright in our daily walk than he—
How can we tell?

Dare we condemn the ills that others do?
Dare we condemn?
Their strength is small, their trials not a few,
The tide of wrong is difficult to stem.
And if to us more clearly then to them
Is given knowledge of good and true,
More do they need our help, and pity, too—
Dare we condemn?

God help us all and lead us day by day,
God help us all?
We cannot walk alone the perfect way,
Evil allures us, tempts us, and we fall,
We are but human and our power is small;
Not one of us may boast, and not a day
Rolls o'er our heads but each hath need to say,
God bless us all.

THE MOTHER'S REQUEST.

"Henry, are you going to the village?"

"Yes; I'm bound that way."

"Will you take the trouble to turn in and do an errand for me with Mrs. Butler?"

"What! to old Nancy's?"

"Yes."

"Good gracious; "that'll take me half a mile out of my way."

"No, no, Henry; not more than a hundred yards."

"Well, that's a bother. What d'you have errands for? I'd like to get off once in my life without being saddled with other people's business."

"Well, well, my son, if the trouble is too great I will wait. You need not bother."

"Oh, don't try on that. Of course I'll go; but it's a nuisance all the same. What's the errand?"

"I would like to have Mrs. Butler come up here to-morrow afternoon and help me through the evening if she can."

"Eh! What's up? D'you expect company? What in the world are you coloring up so for? Have I startled you?"

"No, no, Henry. I was thinking. It was nothing of importance."

"But you didn't tell me if you expect company to-morrow."

"Yes, my son, I do. I expect Ella Mason will be here, and she may have a friend with her."

The face of her son instantly underwent a change.

The look of sourness and crabbedness gave place to an expression of pleasant surprise, and, with a prolonged whistle he turned away.

At a short distance he looked back over his shoulder and called back: "Don't fret, mother; I won't forget Mrs. Butler."

And with that he was gone.

He was a handsome young fellow, was Henry Stevens, tall and strong, brown-haired and gray-eyed, with a face ruddy and healthy and superior to the average of male faces in its manly beauty.

There were defects, however.

The eyes were not prominent, and they were too near together, and there was about the lips a touch of harshness, almost of cruelty.

Yet he was a favorite in society, where only his best side was seen.

His age was two and twenty.

The mother, Mrs. Mary Stevens, was a widow, creeping on toward three score, a mild-faced, patient woman, with a heart as tender and true as any human heart ever was.

The cottage in which she lived was her own, left her by her husband, and she had a few hundred pounds in bank.

Henry was not her only son.

He was the youngest—her baby, she had called him until he had forbidden it—and was preparing for the bar.

He expected to pass his final examination within a month.

"Hallo, mother!"

Ah! it was the voice of her eldest son, Jack, and pretty soon he came in sight.

He was three years older than Henry, and of different fibre.

He was not quite so tall, but broader of shoulder, heavier and stouter in every way.

His hair was of an auburn—his brother called it "red"—and his eyes, full, large, and clear as crystal, were blue, like the precious sapphire.

His face would not, at first sight, be called handsome; but it was a good face, an honest, loyal, trustful face; ah, as one came to know it, and to know the man, it became truly handsome in its way.

Of course he had none of the statuesque Apollo-like beauty that characterized the face of his brother.

He had learned the carpenter's trade, and was now, at the age of twenty-five, just entering business on his own account as a builder.

"Is there anything I can do for you at the village?" the eldest son asked, as he came near to where his mother stood on the doorstep.

"Yes, Jack, if it would not be too much trouble for you to bring home a small bundle for me."

"Can I lift it?"

"It's a small, square bandbox, with a silk dress in it."

"Trouble! you dear mother! Can anything I can do for you be to me ever a trouble? When it is you can set me down for a brute or a crazy man. But where am I to find it?"

"At Mrs. Stickney's. She will have it all ready for you."

"A silk dress! When will you wear it, mother?"

"Perhaps to-morrow."

"Eh! What's to come off then? Is it company, or are you going away?"

"Jack, I expect Ella Mason will be with us on the morrow."

The young man brought a deep, quick breath and a heavy sigh, all of which was clearly seen by a pair of bright eyes that looked out from the cottage, through the intricacies of the latticed vines.

"Well, well," said honest Jack, after a pause, "she'll make the old house seem like a corner of heaven; and I suppose Henry will spruce up a bit and will put on a little good nature. She can be nothing to me, but may God and all the angels bless her, nevertheless. Give me a kiss mother. You don't know how well you look."

"Who could help looking well with such a son, dear Jack?"

"Bah! If I am in any way worthy, I don't forget that it is to the very best mother in the world that I owe it. There! Bye-bye!"

And he was gone.

And the mother went back into her pleasant sitting-room, there to join a fair-faced, golden-haired, blue-eyed damsel who had been an unseen spectator and witness of the scenes we have depicted.

She had come from the railway station about an hour before, brought by private conveyance, with a veil over her face, and Mrs. Stevens alone of all the people about, knew of her arrival.

Both John and Henry were expecting her to come to them on a visit ere long, but no time had been set.

Ah! little did either of them dream that her eyes beheld and her ears heard them both on that day.

Ella Mason was the pleasant visitor.

She was twenty years of age, a healthful, happy, laughter-loving girl, honest and true, and beautiful enough to turn the heads and warm the hearts of a majority of the young men who became acquainted with her.

She was an orphan, her mother having died during her early childhood. Her father remained with her—or, at least, alive to care for her—until she had reached her eighteenth year.

Mr. Mason's business had called him abroad a great deal, and as he could not make a home for his child, he had given her into the care of Mrs. Stevens, whom he had known for many years, and in whom he had entire confidence.

And we may remark here, when the will of Mr. Mason was opened after his death it was found that he had left his daughter Ella heiress to fifty thousand pounds.

From the age of ten to the age of eighteen Ella Mason had been reared in the Widow Stevens' family, in close companionship with her sons, John and Henry.

And who can wonder that both the boys came to love her?

The love of the younger and handsomer son, Henry, was bold and outspoken.

He seemed to fancy himself the lawful possessor; and perhaps he deemed himself invincible.

He had never directly asked her to be his wife, though he had very plainly intimated to her that he should do so when the proper time was come.

The love of John was more like worship, distant and silent.

He carried the dear image in his heart, praying always that her life might be blessed and happy; but he had dared not hope that he could ever help to make it so.

And how was it with Ella herself?

Certainly during the early years Henry had been her favorite, and she may have appeared to prefer him later.

One thing in these later days, however, may have deceived people, and, very likely, deceived Henry himself.

It was his overweening sense of proprietorship that gave the appearance.

He as boldly and selfishly appropriated the fair lady as he would have appropriated any piece of property that he regarded as his own; and yet he did it in such a way that she could not open his eyes to his folly without taking the lead in a matter which had never yet been broached between them.

Had he spoken a single word of marriage she could have very quickly set him right; but he had not done that, though he had often enough hinted at it.

"My dear mamma,"—so Ella Mason had always called her dear foster mother, and had loved her the same—"my dear mamma," she said, as the widow returned to the sitting-room after the departure of Jack, "does the scene which I have just witnessed give me a fair representation of the domestic and loving characters of your two sons? I might call it their heart characters?"

"Ah! Ella," the widow replied, with a sad and dubious shake of the head, "I can tell you nothing new. You know my boys of old. They have not changed."

"And is Jack always as good, as pleasant, and as cheery and willing to help as he appeared but now?"

"Jack? God bless him! Yes, Ella, Since the day when that boy first knew to choose the good from the evil he has never given me an impatient nor an unkind word—not one. As you have seen him to-day, so he is all the time. But let us not blame Henry too much. He comes honestly by his quality of mind and heart. His father was much like what he is now, but his father was never so handsome. Oh, Henry will grow to be a popular man, I am sure, and I do not believe he will ever descend to bad habits or evil practices."

That evening the two sons came home to supper, and were greatly surprised, as well as very much pleased, upon beholding Ella.

"Bless me! when did you come," asked Henry, holding her hand the while.

"I came by the express, and I am just getting rested," she answered promptly.

Now there were two express trains during the day, and the boys naturally took it that she had come by the 4 p. m., and at that let it pass.

They ate supper and a pleasant evening followed.

Several times Jack tried to hold a scrap of conversation with Ella, but Henry pushed him out of the way, and more than once he did it very unkindly.

At length after chatting with his mother for a while, the poor fellow left the room and went away to his own chamber.

"Poor Jack! He's kind o' grumpy, isn't he?" laughed Henry, after his brother had gone.

But no notice was taken of the unfeeling remark and the matter passed off.

And the evening passed.

"Well," said Master Henry to himself, when he reached his chamber after the others had retired, "I'll pluck this plum while it is within my reach. It's about time that we had an understanding as to when the event is to come off. I've no doubt she's anxious—waiting for me to speak. Well, well, I'll finish it up. She shan't wait any longer, poor girl."

On the following day, during the afternoon, Ella found Mrs. Stevens with traces of tears on her cheeks, and was tenderly eager to know the cause.

For a time the widow hesitated, but finally she spoke.

"Jack is going away."

"Jack—going away! For what?"

"Ah, Ella, you should know. Poor boy, he cannot endure it. Oh, how he loves you—how he loves you! But he knows it must ever be a one-sided love for him. He will go and leave his brother to be happy. Ella," throwing her arms around the girl's neck and kissing her, "don't speak of this. Oh, do not let anybody know what I have told you!"

"Hush! You know you may trust me. But, mamma, answer me a question, honestly and truly. If you could have your way, and you thought I would marry with one of your two boys which of them would you prefer that it should be?"

"Oh, Jack, Jack! a thousand times—Jack!"

"Hush! Not another word! Go dry your eyes and hold your peace."

Later on that same afternoon, Jack entered the cottage, finding his mother in the kitchen. He had come to tell her that he had found a good lodging-house which he could take when he pleased and keep as long as he pleased.

He was still speaking when Ella, with a light straw hat on her head, entered the room and put her hand on his strong arm.

He trembled like an aspen.

"Jack, will you please come with me? I have something to say to you."

He went with her out of doors, out into the garden and into a pretty little arbor of flowering vines.

"Jack!" she had gathered all her courage and all her strength, and her own great love, never before so great and palpable as now, gave her help—"Jack, why are you going away?"

He started as from a blow and gazed into her face.

"Ella, don't ask me. Let me go. I must go!"

"Jack, why must you go?"

He looked at her, his frame shook from top to toe; he tried to speak, but could not.

The girl had taken him unawares.

He had not been prepared for such a question from her lips.

"Jack!" reaching a hand up to his great broad shoulder, "would you not be willing to stop at home if I asked you to do it?"

"You? Ella, why should you ask me?"

"Because the old home will seem to me deserted with you gone from it. Really, Jack, if you persist in going I believe I shall go too."

"Ella, Ella! No, no! no, no! you do not mean it. Let me go!"

"Don't be foolish, Jack. Open your eyes. What is it you think I do not mean?"

A single moment the strong man struggled with himself, and then burst forth: "Ella, I love you! I love you with all the love that is within me, as I have, I believe, loved you from the first. You are to me the all-in-all of life. Oh, how I love you! Could you love me in return?"

"Yes, dear Jack," the brave girl replied, frankly and honestly, at the same time giving him her hand. "I love you with all my heart and with all my strength. Will you stay now?"

He caught her to his bosom and held her there a long, long time.

"Oh, Ella! This is not a dream. Can all this happiness be mine?"

"Ah! you share it with me, dear Jack, for in all my life I was never before so supremely happy as I am at this moment. Oh, Jack! I love you very, very deeply, and I do not fear to trust my life in your hands."

"Darling! Oh, how I will strive for your good! And how devoutly do I thank Providence for this crowning joy and blessing of my life!"

Half an hour later they went in, hand in hand, and when the widow saw, her overwhelming joy was speechless.

But she found her speech by-and-by, and then they sat down, and very soon she had heard the whole story.

And that evening Henry heard the story.

At first he refused to believe it, but when he had heard it from Ella's own lips he could doubt no more.

His pride was more deeply hurt than his heart, for, in truth, himself was the only thing on earth which he wholly and heartily loved.

For a time he was very bitter, feeling that he had been wronged and defrauded, but his ill-temper fell back upon himself, having no power to mar the happiness of others; and when he became conscious of the fact—when he saw that his making himself unhappy did not drive the smiles from the faces of the other inmates of the cottage—he held his peace and ceased to find fault.

Several years had passed; the children of Jack and Ella were as bright faced and smiling as were their parents. Henry had found him a wife, and was the father of one child, a pale, dark-eyed boy, when one day, as the two chanced to be for a little time alone together at Jack's fine residence, Harry looked upon his hostess and said; "Ella, I never asked the question, and yet I have often desired much to know when it was that you first began to like Jack. Are you willing to tell me?"

"I always liked him, Henry. How could I help it?"

"So you liked me. You will not deny that. I mean, when did you first make up your mind that you preferred him to me?"

"Henry, you would be angry if I should tell you."

He promised that he would not—promised so solemnly that she finally consented to tell him.

And she told him of the scene with which our story opens. She told him how she had heard him answer his mother, and then how Jack had answered.

She so reproduced the scene that he could not dispute it.

"Henry," she said in conclusion, "in that hour I knew that I could never be wholly happy as your wife. The man who could so speak to his aged mother would be likely to speak still more harshly to his wife after the glamour of the honey-moon was gone and business cares had settled upon him."

Henry did not care to pursue the subject.

He had learned what he sought to know, and it had given him food for thought if nothing more.

A party of ten hotel men in the Astor House rotunda, on Monday, were discussing the recent deaths of Messrs. Hunting and Smith, and hoping the destroyer would not visit their ranks for some time to come, when one of the party said:

"There are several hotel keepers in town whose death, I am sorry to say, is only a question of time."

"Who are they?" eagerly inquired the others.

The first gentleman repeated names that were greeted with expressions of sorrow and regret.

"But I didn't know they were sick," remarked one of the party.

"They are not sick."

"What's the matter with them?"

"Nothing."

"Well, I—"

"As I said, their death is only a question of time."

And solemn silence appeared and mingled with the crowd.—Hotel Mail.

NO FLIES.—He had been driving a stranger around in his hack for a couple of hours, and finally left him in front of City Hall.

"How much?' asked the man as he got out.

"Well, let's see. You got in—"

"Come now, I'm on to your little tricks!" interrupted the stranger. "They told me at the hotel what it ought to be. Here's $4, and if you think you can get any more come down and see me!"

"Well, I'll have to take it, I suppose."

"You bet you will! I'm from a back county, but there are no flies on me."

"How much were you going to charge him?" asked a citizen of the driver after the other had left.

"Not over two and a half at the outside, and only $2 if he had kicked!" cackled John as he gathered up the ribbons.—Texas Siftings.

Does Any One Care For Father?

Does any one care for father?
Does any one think of the one
Upon whose tired, bent shoulders,
The cares of the family come?
The father who strives for your comfort,
And toils on from day to day,
Although his steps ever grow slower,
And his dark locks are turning to gray.

Does any one think of the due bills
He's called upon daily to pay?
Milliner's bills, college bills, doctors' bills,
There are some kind of bills every day!
Like a patient horse in a treadmill,
He works on from morning till night;
Does any one think he is tired,
Does any one make his home bright?

Is it right, just because he looks troubled?
To say he's as cross as a bear!
Kind words, little acts of kindness,
Might banish his burden of care.
'Tis for yourself he is ever so anxious,
He will toil for you while he may live,
In return he only asks kindness,
And such pay it is easy to give.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

"If Cataline Rombustus Pierson ar' in de hall to-night, I should like to hev him step dis way," said Brother Gardner as he wiped his spectacles on his elbow and turned his gaze into the southwest corner.

Cataline, who is a young man of 22, very stiff in the back and of ancient, ancient ancestry, came forward with a bland smile on his face and his coat buttoned very tightly around him.

"Brudder Pierson," continued the president in a fatherly way, "I has had an eye on yo' fur some time back. Are dat a dimun pin you has on?"

"No, sah—it's glass."

"I thought so. Is dar anything at de eand of dat watch chain?"

"No, sah."

"Gold chain?"

"No, sah."

"How's dat suit of cloze, Brudder Pierson—paid fur or not?"

"N-no, sah, but I'ze gwine to pay."

"Oh, you ar'! De tailor was ober to see me las' nite about 'em. Please lemme see dat big roll of money you war carryin' around yesterday."

"I'se done took it apart, sah. It was only a two-dollar bill wrapped around a rag."

"Jist as I spected! How's yer bo'ad, Brudder Pierson?"

"Three weeks behind, sah, but I'ze gwine to pay up."

"Dat's good news. Owe any borrowed money?"

"Y-yes, sah, but I'ze gwine to pay it back."

"Den to sum up, you doan' own de cloze on your back. You ar' cheatin' de public wid a glass dimun, a brass watch chain, an' you am dodgin' creditors in ebery direction. All dis fur what? To put on a leedle style. Brudder Pierson, you am a deceiver; you am a hypocrit; you am a liar. Dar am a heap of white folks just like you. Sooner den let de world know dey am poo' dey will commit a crime. Whar dey orter war kaliko dey will buy velvets; whar dey orter pay deir milk bills dey will use deir money to go to de grand opera. Meet 'em on de street, an' you'd think dey owned a bank. Go to deir homes an you'd think you'd stumbled into de poo'-house.

"I doan' understan' Brudder Pierson, why you feel called upon to swell. Dem cloze won't hide yer black face; dem fashnuble gaiters won't reduce the size of yer feet; a brass watch chain and a glass dimun am not gwine to boost ye into high society an' hold ye thar very long. How does you reason dis case, Brudder Pierson?"

"I—I doan' know."

"Well sah, you reason yer seat. De nex' time you appear heah, dat chain an' watch must be missin'. I'll give you just two weeks to part your ha'r away from de middle. In about four weeks, if dat bo'ad bill ain't paid up an' de tailor feeling safe about his money, sunthin' will drap. It will drap hard, an' it will hit you. Dis club believes in kaliker shirts an' cash down fur grub; in stoga shoes an' house rent all paid up; in Kentucky jeans an' no bill at de butchers; in paper collars an' no dodgin' creditors. Sit down, Brudder Pierson an' think it over."

A SPLENDID NEIGHBORHOOD.—"Is the family that has moved in next door neighborly?" asked one Sioux Falls woman of another.

"Yes, they appear to be. They've borrowed flour of me twice, tea once and sugar three times. Then they have got our tub and the hatchet and two lengths of stovepipe and the baby carriage, and the woman empties all the slops over the fence in our yard and I see her coming across now to hang her clothes on our line."

"I shouldn't think you would like to have them borrow things so much and act quite so free."

"Oh, I don't worry much about it. We've got their mop and and about half of their dishes and their rolling pin and the other day I borrowed ten sticks of wood from them, and each afternoon our hired girl puts on better clothes than the woman has to her back and walks up and down on the sidewalk, and to-night I'm going to put out poison for the dog. Oh, we're getting along very nicely, and I think they are going to be very pleasant neighbors. This always was a splendid neighborhood."—Dakota Bell.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 4, 1887.

VOTERS should remember that votes only, and not good intentions, will count next Tuesday.

MUGWUMPS will show their disgust with the Democratic platform this year by votingthe Republican ticket.

SECRETARY WHITNEY of the navy department is so seriously ill that he has been compelled to give up all care of his office for the present.

JENNIE LIND, the "Swedish Nightingale," whose voice was one of the sweetest ever heard on earth, died at London Wednesday, at the age of 66 years.

JUDGE LOWELL, the referee, decides that the Indian Orchard Mills owe the Atlantic Mills $146,385 as the result of Defaulter Gray's operations. The latter corporation claimed $365,500.

THE United States supreme court on Wednesday denied the petition for a writ of error in the case of the condemned Chicago anarchists, and nothing but a pardon from the governor can now save them from being hanged next Friday.

GOV. AMES ought to be reëlected, and will be if the Republicans turn out. The only reason for making a change would be because Mr. Lovering wants the place, and this is not a very weighty one, considering the record Gov. Ames has made during the past year.

THERE has been a large registration of Democrats in the cities this year, and they will all vote, too. It will pay the Republicans to look sharp after their voters, and see that they are not left to stay at home through indifference, or a feeling that their votes will not be needed.

THIS has been a gala week in Charleston, S. C. During the past year nearly $4,300,000 has been expended in erecting new and repairing old buildings, until every vestige of the earthquake has been wiped out, and the citizens have devoted the week to a joyous celebration of the event.

THE Democrats entered upon the state campaign this year with an unblushing avowal that they were after the spoils of office, but unless we are greatly mistaken the people will show them next Tuesday that they do not want any of that kind of administrative reform.

THE Butler committee have nominated a state ticket. They came near putting Gov. Ames at the head of it, but that would hardly do for a committee whose chief had just indorsed Lovering, so they made it Lovering and Brackett, with the rest of the Republican ticket, except Treasurer Beard. This isn't a Butler year, however, and their action will make little difference with the result.

ACCORDING to the Lawrence American Henry B. Lovering has been instrumental in securing the removal of more disabled Republican veterans from office than any other Democratic representative in this state, and has recommended Democratic politicians, and not soldiers, for their places. The soldier vote is not likely to be greatly drawn toward the Democratic ticket by this fact.

LAWYER LATHROP of Springfield, the Republican nominee for the Senate, has already had experience as a member of that body which will be of great advantage to him, and he is well equipped for good service there. "Charlie" Spellman, his Democratic competitor for the office, is a first rate fellow and has lots of friends,—but so has Mr. Lathrop, and we suspect that the ballots next Tuesday will show that his voting friends outnumber those of his opponent.

THE campaign now drawing to a close in this state has been remarkably devoid of interest, and the worst thing the Republicans will have to contend with on election day will be the prevailing indifference among the voters. The fact is, the ordinary citizen is tired of this annual political stirring up, and would be greatly pleased if it came only once in two years. But as long as we have annual elections it is the duty of every voter to do his part toward putting the right men in office.

THE Springfield Republican cannot be credited with any undue partiality toward Gov. Ames, whose nomination last year it bitterly opposed. There is therefore added force in its remarks concerning the present campaign:

> No proof or even argument is advanced to show that Henry B. Lovering would make a better governor than Oliver Ames. Every intelligent voter can see that the moral weakness of the present executive in yielding his convictions for the sake of placating the soldier vote would not be supplanted with strength of conviction or purpose in case the Democratic candidate for governor should be commissioned to sit in the executive chamber. In a word, good government would not be re-enforced in any way by a change of men. No single policy of advance is proposed in this campaign, and in no way would the state gain in any direction by a change. The independent voter then must go back of the canvass following on the nominations to find reasons sufficient to dictate his action at the polls November 8. He will find in the conventions which named the candidates, tendencies and declarations of sufficiently broad and important bearing to give his vote an influence and meaning above indifferent men. We believe that a careful study of the Worcester convention will lead thousands of Independents to vote the Republican ticket next Tuesday as the best way of impressing themselves on the political situation, local and general. The Democrats at Worcester "wallowed."

Rev. Dr. A. K. Potter, for many years pastor of the State Street Baptist church of Springfield, and one of the most successful pastors the city has ever had, died yesterday morning, at the age of 52 years.

The steamer Vernon went down in the storm of Lake Superior last Saturday, and only one of the 50 persons on board was saved.

Samuel W. Bowerman, a prominent lawyer and citizen of Pittsfield, died on Wednesday, aged 67.

The 19-years-old cashier of the bank at La Junta, Col., has skipped to Mexico with about $10,000.

It is reported that the Old Colony Railroad has leased the Boston & Providence road.

Larrabee's steam bakery at Albany was burned last Saturday, at a loss of $200,000.

A barrel of beer was recently chanced off at a church fair at Portland.

Howland of Monson, minors, and accounts rendered in the estates of Abial Bottum, late of Hampden; Thaddeus G. Carew, late of Monson; George D. Shearer, late of Lundlow.

The indications are that polo will become a very popular sport here this winter. The boys are at present quite enthusiastic over the matter, and propose to make that pastime take the place of base ball. A team has already been formed, and without the customary practice played its first game at Gilbertville Saturday evening. The teams were composed as follows:

PLAYERS.	POSITIONS.	PLAYERS.
Connors,	Rush.	Crawford
Tracey,		Goslin
McCaffery,	Center.	McCarthy

The game resulted: Gilbertvilles, 5; Palmers, 0. The local team is under the management of P. Parker, who will arrange for games with outside teams.

The meeting of Democrats called at the town house Monday evening was attended by a goodly number, who assembled for the purpose of making arrangements for a demonstration in favor of Lovering and Cutting. Considerable enthusiasm and political wrangling was manifested regarding the local campaign. It is asserted that one "would-be" representative from the depot village put in an appearance and desired apparently the nomination of the Democrats for that office, but they got their heads together and positively declined to make him their candidate, but decided to allow some one else a chance to try for a seat under the gilded dome this winter. The state outlook was also discussed to some extent, and finally the following committee was appointed to make arrangements for a rally of some kind: H. C. Strong, A. J. Northrop, John S. Luman, William Sullivan, John Collins, John Downey, Edward Brown and Thomas Moran.

Palmer swung into the Democratic column last year, and will again this year if the Republicans are not awake to their responsibilities. Every able-bodied Democrat will record his vote next Tuesday, and there is no good reason why every Republican should not do the same, with rare exceptions. If this is done, the town will be carried easily by the Republicans, for it is a Republican town when the votes come out. A special effort ought to be made to bring out a large vote for Mr. Grosvenor, the Republican nominee for representative from this district. He is in every way well qualified for the position, and Palmer Republicans should give him a cordial support and a hearty send-off, in return for the faithful support rendered by Ludlow Republicans in recent campaigns. The Prohibitionists expect to poll quite a respectable vote for their candidate, and as he is an old-time Democrat he may get a number of votes from that party. Let the Republicans be "up and doing," however, and there need be no fear as to the result.

A POLITICAL LOVE FEAST.

Some of the leading politicians in Western Massachusetts, together with the various Republican town committees of the first Hampden senatorial district, which includes Palmer, assembled at the Weeks House Wednesday afternoon and enjoyed a political dinner prepared in an elaborate style by Landlord Weeks, at the expense of William H. Haile of Springfield. The meeting and dinner consumed the greater portion of the afternoon, during which informal speeches were made and campaign notes compared, and the situation in this section was pretty thoroughly discussed and plans laid for next Tuesday. After dinner the political party occupied the Weeks House hall. The meeting was to aid E. H. Lathrop of Springfield, the Republican candidate for senator in this district, as much as for any other purpose. Among the gentlemen seated at the tables and who partook of the political love feast, were the following: District Attorney James R. Dunbar of Westfield; W. H. Haile, Springfield; Editor J. L. Shipley of the Springfield Union; ex-Mayor E. D. Metcalf, Springfield; H. A. McFarland, Wales; Francis Wright, Holland; C. A. Homer, Brimfield; C. S. Peck and M. H. Day, Wilbraham; W. W. Leach, G. C. Buell, J. S. Holden and Capt. H. E. W. Clark, Palmer; Rufus Fay, W. M. Tucker and F. Fay, Monson.

POSSIBLE NEW INDUSTRIES.

Several parties have been in town this week looking over desirable sites with a view to establishing manufacturing industries thereon. Parties from Boston and New Haven were here Tuesday and visited the works of the Palmer Wire Manufacturing Company, where they examined the galvanizing department, not at present in use, with the intention of leasing that if practicable, and constructing other buildings in close proximity for the purpose of manufacturing wire nails, thinking that if their factory was located near the wire mill it would involve less expense in the shipment of their material to and from the works. They rendered no definite decision as regards locating here, but it is hoped they will consider the project favorable. Another party has also been in town that employs about 50 operatives in the manufacture of cotton goods. The Goddard hat shop property was examined, and a good impression obtained by the visitors. Still another company that furnishes employment to a large number of people has examined several sites here with a view to locating permanently if satisfactory arrangements can be made. The citizens should take some active measures at once relative to offering them inducements, and organize a board of trade for the promotion of the interests of the town and its growth. The town will never increase its population as long as real estate owners charge exorbitant prices for land, and until inducements are offered to manufacturers to locate in this town, which contains railroad facilities second to no other in the commonwealth.

The Approach to the Station.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS GIVE A HEARING IN THE MATTER.

The railroad commissioners came to Palmer Wednesday afternoon by special train, and after looking over the ground at the depot adjourned to the district court room, which was crowded with citizens. H. C. Strong was the first speaker, and rehearsed the history of the matter from the time the station was first built until now, speaking of the various methods employed by Palmer people in an attempt to get a more convenient approach to the depot, and the failure of all of them. He advocated a tunnel under the tracks, from the West corner of Hatch's block on Main street to the east corner of the station, which would be 116 feet long, and cost $4000. Letters from competent engineers were read which declared the project perfectly feasible. Numerous witnesses—all of whom lived east of Commercial street—testified as to which would most benefit the community. S. S. Taft spoke in favor of the Commercial street entrance, as being more convenient than a long narrow tunnel, through which women and children would not go. E. J. Wood wanted a more central passageway than Commercial street, and Rev. Mr. Weeks an overhead bridge near Hatch's block. J. A. Rumrill presented plans for a Commercial street entrance, and for a bridge over the tracks at that point, and said the tunnel was an idea he had not heard of before. He thought it would cost nearer $10,000 than $4000. In summing up Mr. Taft said that although the Boston and Albany road had spent a good deal of money on its station here, as far as convenience went it might as well have been sunk in the Atlantic ocean. What the people wanted was an easy approach to the depot, not to be let down in the middle of a sandy waste on Commercial street, but to have a convenient opening down to a broad sidewalk such as the plan submitted to the town some time ago called for. The hearing was closed by ex-Gov. Robinson, who favored the tunnel near Hatch's block. He said that when here the legislative committee saw two things—a man on Main street, and the station—and said, "you get them together by the quickest way, only not by a grade crossing." The act read "a passage-way from Main street," and could not be construed to mean Commercial street. The board reserved its decision until later.

Representative Conventions.

PROHIBITION.

The Prohibitionists of the 10th Hampden district held a representative convention at the district court room last Saturday afternoon with a comparatively good attendance of delegates. After the transaction of some preliminary matters James D. Brown of Brimfield was chosen chairman, and J. I. Milliken of Three Rivers, secretary. A committee on credentials was then appointed, consisting of Dr. W. H. Stowe, F. A. Bowen and George A. Wright, who reported that Palmer was represented by 11 delegates; Ludlow, 2; Brimfield, 3. The name of Francis F. McLean of Ludlow was then mentioned as a candidate, and the convention proceeded to take an informal ballot on motion of Dr. W. H. Stowe. J. S. Henry of Ludlow and James Dunham were appointed tellers. The whole number of ballots cast was 15, Francis F. McLean having the full vote. His nomination was then made unanimous. The following district committee for the ensuing year was chosen: J. I. Milliken, Palmer; Frederick Gallup, Ludlow; James D. Brown, Brimfield; Henry Vinson, Holland. Succeeding the above it was deemed not advisable to dissolve the convention without hearing some brief remarks from the gentlemen present. Among the speakers were Dr. W. H. Stowe, J. S. Henry, George A. Wright, Hubbard Lawrence, F. A. Bowen, J. I. Milliken and Rev. Mr. Fulton of Boudsville. The past work of the party and the effect of the no-license reign was discussed, and on the whole the convention was a lively one.

REPUBLICAN.

The Republican representative convention of the 10th Hampden district, which includes the towns of Palmer, Ludlow, Brimfield and Holland was held in the district court room at 10 o'clock this morning with a good attendance of delegates, only two being absent. Charles A. Homer read the call, Capt. H. E. W. Clark of Thorndike was chosen moderator, and Charles A. Homer of Brimfield clerk. L. E. Moore of Palmer, J. Noyes of Brimfield and Benjamin F. Burr of Ludlow were appointed a committee on credentials, and reported 17 delegates present as follows: Palmer, 7; Ludlow, 4; Brimfield, 4; Holland, 2. An informal ballot was moved, and Charles F. Grosovenor's name was mentioned for the office, a little history connected therewith being expounded by a Ludlow delegate. George L. Webber of Holland and W. W. Leach of Palmer were appointed tellers. The whole number of votes cast was 16, Charles F. Grosvenor of Ludlow having 15. Mr. Grosvenor's nomination was then made unanimous. It was suggested and adopted that the rules regarding a district committee be the same for the year ensuing as heretofore. These rules are that the chairmen of the various town committee, shall constitute the district committee. Mr. Brown of Brimfield thought it advisable that a book be procured and the records of all conventions kept therein. This was also allowed by a vote of the convention, and Charles A. Homer, W. W. Leach and Judge Brown were appointed a committee to compile the records.

DEMOCRATIC.

There was a fair attendance of delegats at the Democratic representative convention in the district court room this afternoon. P. J. Cahill of Thorndike opened the convention, Samuel W. Brown of Brimfield was chosen chairman and John Shanly of Brimfield, secretary. A committee consisting of Stewart Alden of Ludlow, W. J. Brown of Brimfield and Thomas Moran of Thorndike was appointed to examine credentials. Palmer was represented by 5 delegates; Ludlow 2; and Brimfield 4. An informal ballot was taken, and P. J. Cahill, F. L. Newton of Brimfield and Thomas Moran were selected as tellers. They reported the whole number of votes cast to be 11, Samuel W. Brown of Brimfield having 8 and Francis F. McLean of Ludlow, the Prohibitory candidate, 3. A good deal of controversy then arose, owing to the fact that Mr. Henry of Ludlow was present and spoke in the interests of Mr. McLean, as did also Stewart Alden, both advocating his nomination by the convention. After a heated debate the convention declined to support Mr. McLean as its candidate. A formal ballot was then taken, resulting in 8 votes being cast, all for Samuel W. Brown. His nomination was then made unanimous. It was then voted that the chairmen of the Democratic town committee of Palmer be authorized to call the conventions in the future.

WILBRAHAM.

Newton Lodge, F. and A. M., held its annual meeting Wednesday and elected the following officers: W. M., F. Pease; S.W., F. W. Green; J. W., W. W. Stockwell; treasurer, Munroe Pease; secretary, W. H. Day. The installation will be the first Wednesday in December.

THREE RIVERS.

The road near the French Catholic church is being graded.

Dr. Ruggles has opened a new street through his land.

Leonard Aldrich, wife and daughter have returned from a carriage drive over the Berkshire hills and through Western Massachusetts.

THORNDIKE.

Are there no constables in this village? A man who was shamefully abusing a horse on the streets last Saturday should have been locked up, but no officer appeared.

The Rock Band Concert Company is booked to appear at Union Hall next Thursday evening. The troupe is most highly spoken of wherever they have been, and should be given a full house.

BRIMFIELD.

The auction of the personal estate of the late Augustus Wheeler was held Tuesday.

Invitations are out for an old-fashioned corn husking at George W. Sherman's Friday evening, to be followed by a social dance.

Mrs. Carrie M. Marsh and daughter, who have been stopping at J. T. Brown's, her father, through the season, left for her home at Maynard last Thursday.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

E. B. Gates has sold the market portion of his business to C. E. Stacey.

The town is putting up several new street lights in this village, which will be a much-needed improvement.

The ladies' benevolent society will hold its first meeting this season at the house of J. A. Parker next Wednesday evening. Supper will be furnished by Mrs. Parker and Mrs. E. W. Wall.

The Democrats have made a very creditable nomination for representative in this district. W. F. Morgan, who has served on the board of assessors for three years is popular with all parties, and will make a good run.

Grace church elected the following officers at the annual meeting Monday evening: Deacon for three years, A. E. Bell; clerk, E. W. Wall; treasurer, H. W. Cutler; superintendent of Sunday-school, H. W. Cutler; assistant superintendent, M. H. Cooley; member of standing committee for three years, Mrs. J. B. Cunningham. The church has given about $200 for missions during the past year.

WALES.

The public schools close Friday, except the primary school, which will continue one week longer.

Painting has begun in Shawville. E. Shaw is painting his Shaw mill, and Warren Shaw, J. B. Burly and H. A. McFarland their residences.

The selectmen have closed the books for registering voters, and posted the warrant for election. In the warrant is an article to allow parties to take the waste water from the fountain, thus securing a permanent way of getting rid of the surplus water at no cost to the town.

George Dorman gave a tent show last Saturday night on land of Isaiah Hitchcock, near the saw mill. Some boys who wished to sow wild oats disturbed him while performing, and cut the tent and ropes, thus breaking up what might have been a very interesting show. One comical sight was one of the parties running down the street with his hat gone and hair flying in the wind, with the showman in close pursuit. The parties are known, and have been offered a chance to settle, otherwise prosecution will be made.

WEST WARREN.

The Good Templars install their newly elected officers next Monday night.

The Saint Jean Baptiste society, that was once in a flourishing condition is now numbered among the things that were.

The Father Matthew temperance society has leased the basement in Willard Hall's block, and will fit up a club room for the members.

Rev. G. H. Morss of the Congregational church attended Wednesday the funeral of John S. Roper of Hubbardston, a former resident of this village.

A large party went over from here to the rally at West Brookfield Monday, and another large delegation attended Wednesday night's rally at Brookfield.

Considerable damage was done by a fire started in the woods Sunday afternoon. It burned until Wednesday morning, when it passed out of sight of the village.

The union revival meetings that were held last week were productive of much good, and so much interest was shown that the meetings were continued through this week.

Burglars visited M. M. Hennebry's place on North street Saturday night, but as this is a no licence town of course nothing was reported as being amiss. Sunday night E. A. Grise's market was broken into and a considerable quanty of sardines and canned goods was taken. It was plainly evident from the way the entrance was made that it was done by parties well acquainted with the place. Charlie Bernard, who has charge of the market, is pretty confident he knows the offenders, and will give them a chance to settle quietly, or suffer the consequences.

BELCHERTOWN.

The new Highland House is receiving a coat of paint.

Rev. O. D. Thomas, state evangelist, will preach at the Baptist church next Sunday, and a series of meetings will follow.

No information of the missing man, Thomas Smithies. He has been absent for the past six weeks, and it is the opinion of the community that he is dead. His family will remove soon to Becket, their former home.

It is thought that the old school building, which has been bought by the Congregational society, will be torn down and a new building put in its place for a chapel for the church.

The political pot has begun to boil, the Republicans having two candidates in the field for representative—Rev. P. W. Lyman and Myron Barton. The Democrats held their convention at Amherst Tuesday morning, and Moody Harrington was nominated for the same office.

Rev. Charles H. Smith was ordained Tuesday afternoon at the Congregational church. He has been engaged for a year and is a graduate of Amherst college and the Hartford Theological seminary. The officers of the meeting were: Moderator, Rev. George E. Fisher of Amherst; sermon, Rev. Dr. Love; ordaining prayer, Rev. G. E. Fisher; charge to candidate, Rev. H. W. Pope; right hand of fellowship, Rev. C. A. Savage of Enfield; closing prayer, Rev. W. F. Sanford.

MONSON.

W. F. Newton of West Upton has been spending a few days in town.

Last Friday evening a raid was made on three of the saloons, resulting in the capture of one keg of the ardent.

It is said that Mrs. Nutter is to transfer her practice to "fresh fields and pastures new," and be seen no more in our midst.

Invitations have been sent out for the celebration, next Wednesday, of the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. William S. Nichols.

Rev. J. H. Emerson and J. J. Smallwood spoke to an audience of about 50 in the Pease district school house last Sunday afternoon.

J. L. Emmons of Westfield meets the citizens of Monson interested in the formation of a singing class at the Methodist vestry this evening. All are invited.

The temperance rally at Memorial Hall Tuesday evening was well attended, and the remarks of Candidate Earle and Dr. Blackmer were listened to with marked interest. The Monson Orchestra furnished excellent music, and the vocal music by the choir was much enjoyed.

John J. Smallwood of Virginia gave a most interesting address upon "The American Negro," in the audience room of the Methodist church last Sunday evening. Something over $16 was contributed to aid Mr. S. in his studies at Wilbraham academy, where he has been a student since January, 1886.

Those who saw several staunch Republicans like Rev. James Tufts and Dr. N. W. Rand going into Memorial Hall last Saturday afternoon must not for a moment imagine that they attended the Democratic convention. Far from it! A school committee meeting accounted for their going there.

Miss Anna Tobey Chandler, formerly of Monson, died at her home in New York on Wednesday of last week, and on Saturday the remains were brought here for burial. Rev. A. W. Weeks of Palmer conducted the funeral, which were held at the Tobey homestead. Among the large number of relatives of the deceased who were present were Clinton C. Tobey and wife, and Mrs. Mary Wing.

Alfred Wallace, a much respected citizen of Monson, died last Friday evening after a long and painful illness. Mr. W. had lived here about eighteen years, working at his trade—painting—summers, and in the straw factory winters. He died on the fourteenth anniversary of his marriage. Mrs. Wallace is doubly afflicted, as her only brother was buried on the day of her husband's death.

WARREN.

Miss Daily has taken a position in the New York store.

The Methodists are to have a harvest concert next Sunday evening.

Rev. Hugh Montgomery gives a temperance address at the town hall to-night.

The Misses Powers gave a Hollowe'en party at their residence Monday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Lincoln have returned from their wedding trip, and will board with Lyman Powers.

Mr. Conway of West Brookfield has the contract for putting in three three-story houses for James Hill.

A party of ladies went to Ware Tuesday and spent the day with Mrs. William Shepard, who had recently left their neighborhood.

The teachers were given Monday to visit schools. Some went to Boston, some to Worcester, Springfield and other smaller places.

Rev. Mr. Clark, president of the general society, and editor of the Golden Rule, gave an address to the Christian Endeavor Society Thursday evening.

The woman's board met with Mrs. Joseph Hitchcock Wednesday afternoon. Miss White of West Brookfield spoke upon the emigration of the Chinese.

The literary society connected with the Universalist church held a public gathering in Crescent Hall Thursday evening. The exercises were very interesting and instructive.

The Republicans had a grand rally at West Brookfield Monday evening with speakers from abroad. A large number from Warren were present, and the Warren Band furnished music.

A number of our people attended the wedding of Dr. Warriner Thursday evening at North Brookfield. The best wishes of his many Warren friends go with him in his new relationship.

The Prohibitionists held a grand rally in the town hall Wednesday evening. Mrs. E. Frank Hill gave an address upon "The temperance position of the day. William H. Earle of Worcester also spoke. The Warren Cornet Band furnished music.

The fall meeting of the Universalist association was held in the Universalist church this week. The sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. Houghton of Springfield Tuesday evening. Wednesday morning a conference meeting was led by Rev. Mr. Bailey of Worcester, and addresses by different speakers were given. The afternoon was devoted to the subject of the influence and morality of the secular press. In the evening Rev. F. Maguire spoke on the dangerous classes. Rev. I. A. Priest answered, how to improve them.

WARE AND VICINITY.

C. A. Stevens & Co. are putting in a new boiler at their mill.

It is expected that the new hotel will be ready for business about the middle of the month.

The school in the new school house in district No. 8 has commenced with Miss Mabel Coney as teacher.

William McIntire has sold his place at Ware Center, formerly the Samuel Rogers place, to Charles Hathaway.

Miss Raymore, the milliner, cashed a check for a man Saturday evening for $12, that proved to be worthless.

D. A. Jennison purchased two, and Henry M. Clark one, fine Kentucky driving horses at New York last week.

Communion service was held by the French Protestant church last Sunday, at which time seven new members were received.

H. A. Smith & Co. have introduced a new system of lighting in their dry goods store that is in some respects superior to any other.

A. N. Dupont has opened a store, selling general merchandise, in the new block corner of Pleasant and Vigeant streets, opposite the old Greenlief place.

John H. Storrs has sold three building lots on the new street which he is soon to open on the Cunningham farm, to Frank M. Gleason, who expects to build soon.

The Central Massachusetts Railroad has purchased land of John O'Conner for $2500, over which to run their spur track to the Otis Company's yard. They have not yet come to an agreement with Frank Kane, and it has been referred to the county commissioners, and may come into court before it is settled.

The business of the Ware Steam Laundry has grown to such proportions that the proprietor, H. A. Utley, needing more help in the management, has sold a half interest to F. W. Carter. The new company will increase the business, which now extends not only to neighboring towns, but to adjoining states.

C. T. Swift, traveling salesman for Sanborn, Ham & Co. of Boston, died suddenly in the office of the Hampshire House last Friday afternoon. He came to town Friday morning and visited his customers about the village as usual, probably the last place being C. Hitchcock & Co's., where he said he was not feeling well and would call again after dinner. He went to the Hampshire House, ate his dinner, apparently as well as ever, after which he sat down in the office and died in a few minutes without speaking.

The French Protestant society, Rev. Thomas Dorion, pastor, will next week break ground for their new church, which is to be on a lot recently purchased on the east side of North street, and will be on the corner of North street and a new street to be opened, running east from it just south of the Cummings place, which is to intersect with a new street running south to the come out near the head of Spring street. The lot is 65 feet front on North street and 125 feet on the new street. The church is to be a neat looking wooden building, which with the trancepts will be about 60 by 60 feet, with tower 11 feet square and 90 feet high to the top of the vane. The trancepts are connected with the main auditorium by folding doors, so they may be used as class-rooms or connected, as may be desired. The seating capacity is to be about 400.

The C supper of the ladies at the Unitarian vestry took place Wednesday evening, and all who attended were well served. About $33 was cleared. The menu was of card board cut in the shape of a C, and on it were the following courses: Cold carved creatures, country cousins' comforts, cereal compounds, cucumbers cider-cured, counts cooked in cream or crackers, churned cream, coagulated curd, cakes covered with confections, cuisine conquests by competent cooks, condiments, creative cheer crystally clear, cordial cheer, cold comfort.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Nov. 2, 1887.

The last week of the campaign is upon us, and what promised to be a very dull year has turned out to be a very lively one indeed. From the first it has been evident that the Democrats have been on the war-path, and that they have been in dead earnest to get out as many votes as possible. They have wanted to show to the world that they can get along well enough without the Mugwumps and that, though they may be arrayed against the administration in their secret hearts, yet they have the party solidly behind them. They have been successful to an unexpected degree, for they have managed so well that these last few days of the campaign find the Republicans straining every nerve to save themselves from defeat. Registration in all the large cities has been unusually large, and here in Boston there are about 6000 more voters on the list than there were a year ago. These voters have been put on for the sake of voting them at the polls, not for a scare, and they will all be heard from on election day.

But the encouraging thing about the situation is that the Republicans have at last waked up and the campaign is now more lively than seemed possible at one time. Speakers are in demand in every part of the state, and if the managers had twice as many at their disposal they would all be wanted by the applicants. Some important documents have also been sent out by the Republicans which are said to be very effective and to be in good demand. One of them gives a statement of the closeness of several of the legislative districts, as follows: 93 representatives were elected by a plurality of less than 112 votes; 62 by less than 75 votes; 52 by less than 60 votes; 46 by less than 50 votes; 24 by less than 25 votes; 13 by less than 11 votes. One had a plurality of one vote and three a plurality of two votes. These figures show how close the issue is in many districts, but it should not be forgotten that the same rule will work both ways, and the districts which went Democratic by a small margin are just as likely to be redeemed as those close the other way are to go Democratic.

Another document is of importance for those who think that the Republican party has done nothing for the cause of temperance. In the first place it gives the public statutes which have been passed by the Republican party in the Legislature. This is, of course, claiming a large share of credit, but if the party is to be saddled by the Prohibitionists with the responsibility of all that has not been done, it is only fair that it should have credit for what has been done. Now there is a large body of restrictive legislation in the three chapters which make up the liquor law. Then the record begins with 1882 and comes down through the succeeding years, each of which has some restrictive law passed by the Republicans. For the sake of those who think that the party did nothing at the last session of the Legislature to restrict the liquor traffic, it may be worth while just to mention by title the acts which were passed. They were as follows: To regulate the disposition of forfeited liquors; to suppress liquor clubs; to enable a real estate owner within 25 feet of any lot to enter valid objection to the licensed sale of liquor on that lot; to prevent the sale of liquor in times of great public excitement; to make the violation of any part of the liquor law (not merely a violation of the license) work a forfeiture of the license; to provide for the seizure of furniture and implements used in liquor-selling; to make the posting of a sign or a signed internal revenue receipt prima facia evidence of the sale of liquor; to restrict the sale of liquor by druggists and apothecaries; and to require the use of anti-fraud ballot boxes when voting on the issue of liquor licenses. Now that is a pretty long list, and it does not agree at all with the charge that the Republicans are at heart in favor of the liquor traffic, as the third party men say. The liquor question has taken great prominence in the campaign, and it is a real misfortune to the temperance cause that its professed friends are doing so much to injure it. But there seems to be no reasoning with them, and I expect that they will go on in their unreasonable course until they have done more harm than they will ever be able to repair. There is only one campaign cry for them, and that is to defeat the Republicans, and they are bending all their energies to that end.

At the Republican headquarters the outlook is more encouraging than it has been at any previous time in the campaign. It is now the sincere expectation of the managers that Gov. Ames will have a good majority, though the fact is recognized that to accomplish this the voters must be brought to the polls and not stay at home with the idea that it is all going to be plain sailing. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon the voters that the great danger is in the senatorial districts. It is in them that the Democrats are making their hardest assaults, and though the matter has been called to public attention before, it needs to be especially remembered on election day.

One of the notable events of the week has been the dedication of Miss Whitney's statue of Leif Erikson at the entrance of the Back Bay park. It stands quite near Gov. Ames's house, and can easily be seen from the cars by those who come in on the Boston and Albany road. The figure is erect and strong, but I can't help thinking that his legs will be awfully cold this winter.

In these times of exciting public issues it is interesting to notice that there is so great interest in the Shakespeare lectures of Henry A. Clapp, the dramatic critic. A great crowd was present at the opening sale of tickets. LANDON.

November Magazines.

The November issue of the Eclectic offers an attractive table of contents. John Addington Symonds has the place of honor, in a charmingly written paper on "Realism and Idealism," in which he discusses the burning literary questions of the day. The story of Zebehr Pasha, the man who has had so much to do with Gordon and Stanley, is related as taken from his own lips. Two interesting literary papers, "Invention and Imagination," and the present state of the novel," will be found attractive reading, as will also the sketch of literature at the antipodes, "Australian Literature," "The Creatures we Breathe," and "A Fossil Continent," will fascinate attention. The article on "Count Tolstoi," the Russian novelist, discusses one of the most talked-of-men of a recent period. A writer in Temple Bar gives a readable sketch of Beust under the title of "A Lover of England," The "Sacred Way of Eleusis," is a very pleasant study of modern Greece and its relation to old Hellas. There are a number of readable short papers, and the departments have their usual interest. Published by E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond street, New York.

Harper's Magazine is strong in descriptive articles finely illustrated and in fiction. Through its pages the reader becomes cosmopolitan and travels in many interesting lands; he discovers beautiful scenes and works of art; he is made acquainted with social customs, and by means of poems and stories, tastes of different literary methods of today. The number is one of the most attractive of the year. The frontispiece, a charming picture of a maiden among wild beasts, from a painting by F. S. Church, illustrates an opening sonnet. Life in Southern lands is well represented in three articles. Edwards Roberts describes "A Santa Barbara Holiday" with the help of many illustrations, picturing life in Santa Barbara as mostly an outdoor one. Much farther south and less known are the Argentine Republic and Uraguay, which William Ellery Curtis describes in an illustrated article entitled "The Other End of the Hemisphere." The concluding paper in the series, "Here and There in the South," by Rebecca Harding Davis, describes the Acadian country, Gibson's fine art work giving a charm to its Southern scenes. The most timely descriptive article in the number is an historical account of "Chantilly, the Chateau and the Collection," recently presented to the Institute of France. The illustrations show the richness of the art treasures recently gained by the public. In fiction, Kathleen O'Meara's Russian novel of "Narka" is finished, and Mr. Howells's novel of "April Hopes" comes to a conclusion full of gloomy passages for the future of young couples whose fortunes he has followed. In short stories, Amelie Rives contributes a strong and poetical romance of the Deluge. "A Man and Two Brothers" is a character sketch by George Parsons Lathrop. The political economy in the number is due to Rev. Charles F. Twing. Besides poetry and light talks the editorial departments are suggestive, timely and interesting.

A full and varied number of St. Nicholas shows that a fine entertainment is ready for the children's holiday pleasure. Instructive articles and stories are brief, bright and pleasant, and illustrations are dainty. The frontispiece, representing the famous portrait of "Grandfather Lepage," is one of several illustrations from the works of the Peasant-Painter, whose life is sketched for young readers by Ripley Hitchcock. Elephants which are always interesting, are briefly described by John R. Corgell. E. S. Brooks takes the popular Pocahontas as the heroine of his paper in the Historic Girl's series. "The Last Chance of Life," by David Ker, is an incident of Napoleon in Egypt. "Little Matti of Finland" is illustrated with well-known silhouettes by Helen M. Hinds. Short stories are numerous, and well-known writers are contributors to all departments.

Never defer until to-morrow what should be done to-day. A slight cough shouldn't be neglected when Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will cure it.

The readers of our publication are requested to use Salvation Oil for any and all pains. It is a sure cure and costs only 25 cents.

Use it for pain, externally or internally. It is a great remedy for Piles.—Pond's Extract. Avoid base substitutes for the genuine.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, are selling F. P. Robinson & Co's clean fast-black hose, which positively will not stain the feet, and they also sell seal plush sacques, made of genuine London seal plush, selected materials, extra quality lining and plush face seal ornaments, all sizes, 32 to 42, at $20, worth to-day $30; at $22.50, worth to-day $32.50; at $25, worth to-day $35. The are warranted a perfect fit, and for real serviceable wear they have no equal.

I have not used all of one bottle yet. I suffered from catarrh for twelve years, experiencing the nauseating dropping in the throat peculiar to that disease, and nose bleed almost daily. I tried various remedies without benefit until last April, when I saw Ely's Cream Balm advertised in the Boston Budget. I procured a bottle, and since the first days' use have had no more bleeding—the soreness is entirely gone.—D. G. Davidson, with the Boston Budget, formerly with the Boston Journal. 2w32

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action w th the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle. 1ySeow

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

This remedy is becoming so well known and so popular as to need no special mention. All who have used Electric Bitters sing the same song of praise.—A purer medicine does not exist and it is guaranteed to do all that is claimed. Electric Bitters will cure all diseases of the Liver and Kidneys, will remove pimples, boils, salt rheum and other affections of impure blood.—Will drive Malaria from the system, prevent as well as cure all Malaria fevers.—For cure of headache, constipation and indigestion try Electric Bitters.—Entire satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.—Price 50 cts. and $1.00 per bottle at Legro & Lynde's drug store. 5

IS CONSUMPTION INCURABLE?

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark., says:

"Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an Incurable Consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle, and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jessie Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 5

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by Legro & Lynde. 1y29

GIVE THEM A CHANCE!

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend on this for certain. 1y46eow

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, creditors and all other persons interested in the estate of Harriet A. Lawrence, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas Selah W. Lawrence, of said Palmer, named as executor in the will of said deceased, which was approved and allowed in said court, on the fourteenth day of September, now last past, has presented to said court his petition praying to be exempt from giving a surety on his official bond as such executor, in accordance with the request of the testator expressed in said will, and of the only next of kin expressed in the petition for the probate thereof.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Palmer, in said county of Hampden, on the fourth Wednesday of November, next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, for three successive weeks, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper published at Palmer, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-ninth day of October, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-seven.

SULPHUR BITTERS

THE BEST AND PUREST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

TRUTHS FOR THE SICK.

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those Pimples and Blotches which mar your beauty are caused by impure blood, and can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS.

What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle, soothing DON'T tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. GIVE Sulphur Bitters is NOT a cheap rum or poor whisky drink, to be taken by the UP! gloss, like other preparations, which stimulate only to destroy. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible headache? Why lay and toss on that bed of pain with rheumatism?

If you have failed to receive any benefit from other medicines or doctors, do not despair. Use Sulphur Bitters. They will cure you when all others fail. No person can remain long sick who uses SULPHUR BITTERS.

The dose is small—only a teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied. Get it of SULPHUR your druggist. Don't wait, get it at once. If you are suffering from Kid- BITTERS. ney Disease, and wish to live to old age, use Sulphur Bitters. They never fail to cure

Jim Webster being once more before the court, His Honor asked:

"Haven't you been in jail for stealing chickens once before?"

"No, sah; no indeed I hain't. Praise de Lawd for his infinite goodness and mussy, nobody hain't cotched me yit. Hit seems as ef I was pertected by the higher powers."—Texas Siftings.

Mrs. Blobson—"What's that? Oh, horrors! The hotel is afire?"

Mr. Blobson—"Yes; come on. We've no time to lose."

Mrs. Blobson—"But here I am in my night dress!"

Mr. Blobson—"Good enough! I'm glad you've got out of your ball dress and into something decent."—Burlington Free Press.

YOU MAY REMOVE

Those unsightly Blotches, Pimples and Sores by a faithful and persistent use of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, the best and most reliable Alterative and Blood-Purifier ever discovered. "I was troubled, for a long time, with a humor, which appeared on my face in

RUGS. RUGS. RUGS.

We have a very large assortment of John Bromley & Son's best quality Smyrna Rugs In all Sizes at Bottom Price. Every party in need of Carpets ought to see and examine our stock in this department. We can save you money every time.

LACE DEPARTMENT.

GREAT SALE OF BLACK LACES.

This lot of Black Laces which we offer at such a terrific reduction from former prices was purchased from a large importer to clean up his spring stock before he opened his fall goods. We bought nearly $500 (Five Hundred Dollars) worth for $100 (One Hundred Dollars). We have put the entire lot on sale at 6¼ cents. None of the patterns was sold for less than 25c. up to 50c. We also offer a lot of

Fine Ornamental Laces at 15 cents. Never sold for less than 37½c. to 50c. In the purchase were 400 pieces

Wide Hamburgs Which we offer at 25 cents. The goods would bring in New York 37½ cents wholesale.

This is a Great Bargain.

SILK & VELVET DEPARTMENT.

We shall open this week our Fall Importation of SILKS AND VELVETS, without any doubt the largest assortment we have ever had the pleasure of offering to the Springfield public, and at prices much under Spring. Ladies who desire a BLACK SILK DRESS that will wear and give entire satisfaction, should call and examine those beautiful Black Rhadames, of our own importation, a make of goods which we warrant to our customers for six months. ELEGANT ASSORTMENT OF COLORED RHADAMES AT $1. Same quality sold in New York at $1.25 by one of the largest retail houses. BLACK AND COLORED FAILLES in all the most desirable shades for street and evening wear. The best value in the country at $1.25. Examine our stock of Silks before you make a purchase. We are positive we can save you money every time. Making our purchases direct with the manufacturers, we save the jobber's profit.

HOSIERY DEPARTMENT.

We beg to announce to the ladies of Springfield and vicinity that we shall offer the largest assortment of Foreign and Domestic Hosiery ever shown in this city. Our stock will embrace products of the best English, French and German manufactures, having been selected with special care that we should have nothing but goods suitable for first class trade. We shall also offer an immense stock of Ladies', Men's and Children's Merino and Wool Underwear, in all qualities, from the cheapest up to the finest goods imported. As a special bargain we shall offer about 75 dozen Ladies' and Men's Underwear from one of the best manufacturers. This was their entire stock of odds and ends, after the season's business. We offer a lot at $1 each, worth $1.50 to $3. We offer a lot of Men's Jersey Shirts, Double back and front. This is a lot of shirts that was made for the California market, and is just the thing for men that are at work out of doors. Every expressman should examine this shirt. After they are gone no more can be had in this market. We offer them at $1.50, which is just half-price.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer as demonstrations of the unequalled excellency of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century. A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

The Greatest Spring Tonic.

At this season of the year almost every one experiences a sensation of general lassitude and debility, which, if neglected, results in a low vitiated condition of the vital forces, that follows the sufferer throughout the summer, and usually terminates in some form of malarial or typhoid fever. If, however, the patient has the wisdom to take some reliable remedy that gently acts on the sluggish liver, enabling it to speedily carry off all impurities, while at the same time the system is vitalized and invigorated, and the blood enriched, the result is invariably brought about by

Forty Years Ago.

I've wandered to the village, Tom,
I've sat beneath the tree
Upon the schoolhouse playground
That sheltered you and me;
But none were left to greet me, Tom,
And few were left to know
Who played with me upon the green
Just forty years ago.

The grass was just as green, Tom,
Bare-footed boys at play
Were sporting, just as we did then,
With spirits just as gay.
But the master sleeps upon the hill
Which, coated o'er with snow,
Afforded us a sliding place,
Some forty years ago.

The old schoolhouse is altered some;
The benches are replaced
By new ones very like the same
Our jackknives had defaced.
But the same old bricks are in the wall,
The bell swings to and fro;
Its music's just the same, dear Tom,
'Twas forty years ago.

The spring that bubbled 'neath the hill,
Close by the spreading beech,
Is very low; 'twas once so high
That we could almost reach;
And kneeling down to take a drink,
Dear Tom, I started so,
To think how very much I've changed
Since forty years ago.

Near by that spring, upon an elm,
You know, I cut your name,
Your sweetheart's just beneath it, Tom;
And you did mine the same.
Some heartless wretch has peeled the bark,
'Twas dying sure, but slow,
Just as the one whose name you cut
Died forty years ago.

My lids have long been dry, Tom,
But tears came in my eyes;
I thought of her I loved so well,
Those early broken ties.
I visited the old churchyard,
And took some flowers to strew
Upon the graves of those we loved
Just forty years ago.

Some are in the churchyard laid,
Some sleep beneath the sea;
And none are left of our old class
Excepting you and me.
And when our time shall come, Tom;
And we are called to go,
I hope we'll meet with those we loved
Some forty years ago.

THE ELDER SISTER.

One of the most vivid remembrances of my school days is of the picnic in the Hemlock Ravine. An occurrence connected with it fixed it indelibly in my memory.

It was Mrs. Estey who planned this picnic. She was a gay young widow, who spent her summers in our little mountain village, and who had not much to do, except to invent schemes of amusement and to carry out her pleasant social plans. The picnic was to close and surpass all the public pleasures of the season; for October had come, and the wind was growing chilly, and the trees were turning red and brown.

There were not more than a dozen young people in the village, and Mrs. Estey had taken me and my bosom friend, Netty Thurston, into "society," as she called it, though we were still at school.

On the evening before the picnic I went over to Netty's to tea, as usual, to discuss the affair. That evening Judge Thurston and his wife, their elder daughter Ellinor, and two or three of Netty's friends, were at the table. The judge was very deaf, and Mrs. Thurston was always wrapped in her own thoughts. Miss Ellinor was quiet as usual; so we girls had all the conversation to ourselves, and that, of course, seemed to us the suitable order of things.

Lou Heriot was delighted with Mrs. Estey's arrangements. "She has secured six boats, and we are to row up the river six miles until we reach the Hemlock Ravine. My sister was there once. She says it used to be the favorite resort of the young people of the last generation, and that it is the wildest, loveliest spot in the world. We can stay together or wander off if we choose. We shall come home by moonlight."

"Oh, delicious!" cried Netty, clapping her hands. "It will be a day in Paradise!"

Lou glanced at me and laughed. We fancied that Netty's Paradise would consist in flirting with Sam Farley. Even I, though I was not fifteen, was to have a "beau" provided for me by that most considerate of chaperons, Mrs. Estey. I secretly wondered what stately Mrs. Thurston would say if she guessed at our proceedings.

"Ellinor," said Netty, turning to her sister, "will you see that my lunch is put up? And just look over my blue merino, please; I think the gathers are ripped."

Miss Ellinor smiled and nodded. Most of Netty's friends considered her sister "too sweet for anything," because she was so ready to take all that young woman's burdens on her shoulders. If anything could have atoned in our eyes for the misery and disgrace of being an "old maid," it was the gentle unselfishness of Ellinor Thurston. She was a woman of thirty, and as my maturer judgment now tells me, of a rare and fine type of beauty, very different from Netty's fat, high-colored charms; but an "old maid" was, in our opinion, an object of sympathy and charity in any family.

Mrs. Thurston, to our surprise, had heard Netty's orders, and said, quietly:—"You are quite old enough, Henrietta, to attend to your own luncheon and clothes. I wish you, Ellinor, to rest this evening, if you are going to Hemlock Ravine to-morrow."

"Going! To Hemlock Ravine!" gasped Netty. "Are you going to the picnic!"

The other girls said nothing, but we listened, aghast, for the answer.

"I was invited, Netty," said Ellinor, gently. "I have not gone anywhere for a year or two, as you know; but I thought I should like to go to the Ravine once more—for certain reasons."

Her voice, always low and soft, trembled as if the tears were not far off. If I had not been so angry, I should have been touched.

Netty made no reply, but she shrugged her shoulders contemptuously, and began to eat her supper with ominous haste. I saw she was in a passion. Here certainly, was an end of any flirtation with Sam Farley!

"I shall not interfere with you young people," said Ellinor, smiling patiently. "Dr. Scudder will row me up the river, and there are some places that I should like to see again. I will be one of the party that will "wander off by themselves,'" trying to jest.

"Oh, you can go if you like, and do what you like when you get there," said Netty, with a toss of her head.

"Henrietta!" said her mother, in a low voice.

Netty rose from the table, and rushed to her own room. We soon followed her.

"The old thing!" she broke out. "What has she to do in society? When women get to that age, they ought to know that their room is better than their company."

"They lag superfluous on the stage," said Lou Heriot, who always had a quotation ready to fling at you. "No Sam Farley for you to-morrow, Netty! No beaux for any of us. We'll have to 'remember that we are little girls,' as my mother says, and behave like the lambs from the primary school."

"Perhaps," I ventured, "Miss Ellinor may not be able to go. She has not looked well for a long time."

"She's always moping," said Netty.

Now Netty usually appeared very fond of her sister, who had made a pet and baby of her all of her life. This was the first time that she had interfered with her pleasure, and Netty nursed in selfishness, found her affection vanish. We went home, leaving her sulking and sullen.

The next morning, however, when the little party gathered on the pier to start, Netty's pink cheeks and bright eyes were radiant.

"It's all right," she whispered to me, as she came up.

It was a warm October morning, with that golden haze in the air which makes the commonest objects look like parts of a beautiful dream. The broad glimmering river flowed slowly by; the boats were gathered about the pier which were to take us into the hills that towered dim and mysterious in the distance. Mrs. Estey and part of the gay crowd were embarked, when Judge Thurston's carriage drove down to the pier, and Miss Ellinor, very pale, but smiling, alighted. Dr. Scudder hurried to receive her. He was the chief physician in the village, and an old, trusted friend in the Thurston family.

"It was kind in you to give me this great pleasure," I heard her say to him.

"Look!" whispered Netty: "father and mother had to come down to see her off! They make an idol of her. It is perfectly ridiculous! They are going with her to New York to-morrow. It is three years since I was in New York. Hurry! hurry! Do go aboard, all of you!"

There were two boats yet at the pier, a large one into which Lou, Netty and I, with our chaperon and the two rowers were soon seated. The other was the Dart, a small bateau belonging to Dr. Scudder. It was usually anchored out of sight of the end of the pier. Just as we pushed off, the doctor gave orders to have it brought round for Miss Ellinor. A cry of dismay rose from the crowd of boys on the pier. The pretty little Dart, which everybody knew, with its scarlet and white bands, was lying on the shore covered with mud.

"What is the matter?" said the doctor, angrily, "she was clean and dry last night."

Our rowers stopped to see the end of the affair. I noticed that Nettie ordered them, impatiently, to go on, and that Jim Stryper, a "river rat," slunk to the back of the crowd.

The Dart was examined by Dr. Scudder. He found that two large holes had been broken in her hull.

"She is useless," said the doctor, quietly; "whoever did it made thorough work of it. Is there no other boat I can hire for the day?"

"There is not a boat left; the picknickers have taken them all," the boys assured him.

"Go on! go on!" whispered Netty; "there's no room for them here."

Our boat shot into the middle of the stream, but not before we heard the doctor say? "I would not have you lose this day for my year's income, Ellinor. I will find out who did it and punish them to the extent of the law."

"No, do not," she said, earnestly. "Let it go; it matters little, after all." I fancied that her eyes followed Netty with a sad reproach as we rowed away.

"You should not have done that," I said to her.

She laughed uneasily.

"I? I did nothing. It was Jim Stryper; but it cost me all my month's allowance. Jim charges high."

It was a successful picnic. The salad was delicious, the scenery was beautiful, the "beaux" attentive, but I had a guilty, uncomfortable feeling in my heart all day. Netty talked and laughed loudly. It seemed to me that she was trying to deaden some inward pain.

It was late when we went home, tired and sleepy. I walked up the street with her.

"How dark the house is!" she said. "Come in with me a minute, Kitty."

A dim light was burning in the hall. Mrs. Stone, Judge Thurston's sister, came out to meet us.

"You here, Aunt Mary!" cried Netty. "What is the matter?'

"Nothing, my dear; but your father and mother took Ellinor to New York to-day, as she could not go up the river. Dr. Scudder went with them. I am to stay with you until they return."

"Dr. Scudder went with them! What for! Is"—

"I may as well tell you, Netty; I think you should have been told before, but Ellinor wished to spare you. She has a disease for which the only cure is an operation. They have gone to a surgeon in New York to perform it."

" never knew"—

"No. Ellinor complained very little; but that is the reason why she did not marry. Surely you know! She was engaged for years to a man whom she loved very dearly. She wanted to go up the river to-day, they told me. She had passed so many happy days with him there when she was younger, and she had a kind of homesickness to look at the place once again and to say good-by to it; but something prevented her."

Nettie started up and began pacing up and down the hall without a word.

Mrs. Stone was crying softly.

"She thinks," she went on, "that she never will come back."

"Never—come back! Why, you said the operation would cure her! Not come back! My Ellinor!"

"I said the operation was the only hope of cure. But the danger is that she may not live through it."

Netty came up to Mrs. Stone. Her face had grown old and pinched in those few minutes.

"Tell me the truth! What is the chance that she will live?"

"Control yourself, Netty. Ellinor has been bearing a terrible suffering for years; she is weakened by it. Dr. Scudder told me there is scarcely a hope that she would survive the operation."

Netty turned and ran to her own room and locked the door. The cry she gave when she was alone rang in my ears as I crept home.

Two days afterward the operation took place. The village that day was very quiet. Even the children knew that Miss Ellinor was making the last effort for life. She was very dear to us all; we never had known how dear until then. Her mother wrote at noon: "Before the surgeons came into the room, she bade us farewell, and said, 'Kiss Netty for me, and tell her how dearly I love her.' In an hour we shall know the result."

The whole village waited. A messenger from every house was at the telegraph office. I think we all prayed for her that day.

In the evening the dispatch came from Dr. Scudder: "It is all over; she is at rest."

From the night when I left her alone in her room I had not dared to go near Netty.

But the day of the funeral I went up with some flowers which I had gone up the river to gather, in the foolish fancy that the dead girl might know whence they came and be pleased, and while I was laying them on her breast, Netty came into the room and stood beside me. She did not shed a tear, but the change in her face terrified me."

"That is Ellinor," she said, "who petted me from the time I was a baby. She might have had one happy day before her death, but I deprived her of it."

I could say nothing. It seemed to me as if the living girl as well as the dead one was before God in judgment.

Her whole nature was changed by that blow. She became as gentle and unselfish a woman as her sister had been. She said to me once, when both our heads were growing gray: "I shall not be happy in heaven until I find Ellinor and know that she has forgiven me."—Youth's Companion.

THE GIRL WHO HELPS MOTHER.

There is a girl, and I love to think of her, and talk of her, who comes in late when there is company, who wears a pretty little air of mingled responsibility and anxiety with her youth, whom the others seem to depend on and look to for many comforts. She is the girl who helps mother. In her own home she is a blessed little saint and comforter. She takes unfinished tasks from the tired, stiff fingers that falter at their work; her strong young finger is a staff upon which the gray-haired, white-faced mother leans and is rested. She helps mother with the spring sewing, with the week's mending, with a cheerful conversation and congenial companionship that some girls do not think worth while wasting on only mother. And, when there comes a day that she must bend, as girls must often bend, over the old worn-out body of mother lying unheeded in her coffin, rough hands folded, her long disquiet merged in rest, something very sweet will be mingled with her loss, and the girl who helped her mother will find a benediction of peace upon her head and in her heart.

The girl who works—God bless her—is another girl whom I know. She is brave and active. She is not too proud to earn her own living, nor ashamed to be caught at her daily task. She is studious and painstaking and patient. She smiles at you from behind the counter or desk. There is a memory of her sown into each silken gown. She is like a beautiful young mountaineer, already far up the hill, and the sight of her should be a fine inspiration for us all. It is an honor to know this girl—to be worthy of her regard. Her hand may be stained with factory grease or printers' ink, but it is an honest hand and a helping hand. It stays misfortune from many homes; it is the one shield that protects many a forlorn little family from the almshouse and asylum—brave, polite, refined, ambitious; the South is the rightful home of the girl who works—God bless her.—New Orleans Picayune.

THE NAKED TRUTH—"You have heard the expression, 'The naked truth,' and perhaps you do not know how it originated," said the Rev. Sam Jones in a sermon recently. "I will tell you. Once upon a time Truth and Error went in bathing together. Error came out first, put on Truth's clothes and ran away. And Error has been trying to wear the same garments ever since. When Truth came out of the water the only clothing he could find to put on was what belonged to Error. 'Before I will wear such garments as those,' said Truth, 'I will go naked all my life.' Truth has kept its word, and goes through the world naked, without frill, or bang, or bustle, or anything else."

Alone.

Since she went home—
The evening shadows linger here,
The winter days fill so much of the year,
And even summer winds are chill and drear,
Since she went home.

Since she went home—
The robin's note has struck a minor strain,
The old glad songs breathe but a sad refrain,
And laughter sobs with hidden, bitter pain,
Since she went home.

Since she went home—
How still the empty rooms her presence blessed;
Untouched the pillow that her dear head pressed;
My lonely heart hath nowhere for its rest,
Since she went home.

Since she went home—
The long, long days have crept away like years,
The sunlight has been dimmed with doubts and fears,
And the long nights have rained in lonely tears,
Since she went home.

CARL DUNDER TALKS TO THE CHILDREN.

Shildren I like to talk mit you a leedle on two subjects. One subject vhas being good, und der udder subject vas being bad. I suppose you haf heard of Sheorge Washington? He vas an awful nice mans. Vhen he vhas a poy so high he doan' make no troubles as a cat. He goes to ped in der dark, und doan' make one kick. He doan' shteal nor lie nor sheat nor play dot confidence game on somepody. One time he takes down his fadder's shotgun und kills a calf in der lot. His fadder comes home und sees dot calf und calls out in a loud voice:

"Who vhas dot cut down my favorite sherry tree? Let der villian stand pefore me!"

Dot leetle George he vas awful scart, und his knees wobble like dis, und he wished he vas deadt. But he vhas like some hero. He should tell der truth if he vhas brained mit a club, und so he shpoke oop und says:

"Fadder, I can't tell some lies. It vhas me, but I didn't know it vhas loaded."

"My son, come to my arms!" shpoke dot fadder, und he shed some tears und gif leedle Sheorge a $2 continental bill.

Dot vhas Sheorge Washington's start in life. He doan' tell a lie, und he gets to be a great Sheneral und vas President. You see, if you vas good you vhas sure to be rewarded. When you vhas leedle you vhas rewarded with shweetcake und white sugar; vhen you vas oop you haf a fat office und vas called der fadder of your country. Dot vas being good. I now tell you how it vas to be padt.

One time dere vas a little poy named Horace Greeley. It seemed like he vas pad all oafer. If he plays marbles mit some poy he sheats him out of more ash ten dollar. He bites der school-teacher in der leg und runs avhay, und pefore he vas 10 years oldt he shteals a horse. One day he goes mit der court for preaking a window, und der shudge says:

"Horace, vhy did you do like dis?"

"Your Honor," replies dat poy, "I cannot tell some lies. I vas in Chigago ven Shim Brown breaks dot glass!"

Dot vas der beginning of his downward career. He goes to New York and starts a saloon called der Tribune, and he invents a by-word called "Go West," und he finally grows so badt dot he kills a man named Peter Cooper, und vas hung until he vas deadt.

Now, shildren, you see der difference. If you like to be good it pays you two hoondered cents on der dollar. If you like to be badt you shall come to some awful end. I could go on und tell you of Sheorge W. Childs, Shay Gould, Russell Sage, und odder men who vas badt und vas sent to destruction, but I believe you doan' need him. Der poy or girl who doan' be a highway robber or red-handed murderer shall grow up respected and happy, und wear more ash one hoonered rhinestones.—Detroit Pree Press.

BLOOD ORANGES.

Strolling about the neighborhood of the Quincy market, writes a Boston correspondent of the Iowa State Register, my attention was attracted by a sign, "Blood Oranges, $7.50 a box," which decorated the exterior of an importer's shop. I had always supposed that the blood orange was a freak of nature, to be found semi-occasionally, like a yellow fire cracker in a pack of the Golden Dragon brand; but this, it seems, was a mistake, for the dealer assured me that the ruddy fruit was a distinct variety.

"It is artificially produced," he said, "by grafting an ordinary orange tree with the pomegranite. The result is an orange like any other, so far as flavor is concerned, but with red juice; it is visible through the skin. It bring slightly higher price, because it is regarded as a curiosity. The people of Sicily cultivate it mostly. Yes, there are one or two queer kinds of oranges I know of. The pine-apple orange, which has something of the pine-apple flavor, is finding its way into the market. Then there is the "navel" orange, grown extensively in Southern California. It is considered particularly fine, and sells at corresponding prices. The most curious thing about it is the astonishingly accurate imitation of the human umbilicus which ornaments the extremity farthest from the stem. It is from this peculiarity that the variety takes its name. These navel oranges, by the way, are of the feminine gender, and have no seeds at all.

"I had a few sweet lemons in stock the other day," added the dealer. "They are quite a rarity. People in this part of the world have poor taste in tropical fruit, anyway. They will always pay more for a red banana than for a yellow one, though the former is considered an inferior fruit where both are grown. The lime, too, is far more prized in tropical countries than the lemon, but northerners think it is only good for pickling.

A young man from Philadelphia who went West penniless three years ago signed a check for $30,000 yesterday. He got fifteen years—Harrisburg Star.

WHAT NOT TO SAY.

"Stopping" for staying. As, "He is stopping with us," for "He is staying with us."

"Right away," for immediately. "Come right away" should be "come at once," or immediately.

"Some," for about or probably. "It is some five miles to town," should be "It is about five miles," etc.

"Storms for rains or snows. Storm is an atmospherical disturdance and has reference to air and wind.

"Nice," for pretty, good, etc. "That is nice! he is a nice boy, isn't she nice!" etc. Something nice is delicate, exact, as a nice point in a discussion.

Try and come, do write, etc., for try to come, to do so, to write, etc. "I shall try and come to see you, soon," should be, "I shall try to come," etc.

Just as soon, for just as lief. "I would just as soon do it as not," should be, "I would just as lief do it," etc. Soon means in a short time, not rather.

"Posted," for informed. As "He is not posted on that matter, post him on the subject." Post means to put up a sign or to drop a letter in the post-office.

"Guess," for suppose or think. "I guess this is right," should be "I think," etc. Guess means "to hit at random," as "I can't guess how many cents you have."

"Party" for person. Party is a gathering of people, not an individual. "Who is that party?" when one is meant should be: "Who is that person or individual."

"Drive," for to take riding. "He took his carriage and drove me to town." He drove the horse, but not me. It should be: "He took me to town in his carriage."

"Funny," for odd, strange. As, "it seems very funny to me that he does not come," should be, "it seems very strange," etc. Funny is something amusing, full of fun.

"Depot," for station. "I will go to the Allentown depot, should be, "I will go to the Allentown station." A depot is a terminal point. Station, a place along the route.—New York Mail and Express.

SOMETHING ABOUT CANES.

"You see a cane crank is in a certain sense as bad and as much a nuisance as a cigarette fiend. It's a mighty interesting study to watch and size up these cranks. If once a man carries a cane he is booked. The habit grows on him, and it's very rare that he shakes it off."

"What variety of canes command the most ready sale?"

"The 25 and 50 centers. They are mostly in apple, backmatack, imitation Molacca, hazel, maple and other common wood. No, they are not carried by young men alone, by any means. Why, it's only yesterday I sold a 25 cent applesprig to a Wall street man who can draw his check for $300,000. Then there's a well-known literary man in New York who also swings one of the same kind, and he actually has the nerve to tell some of his friends that it is a rare whitehorn switch, the only one of its kind in the land. In striking contrast to these is a clerk in a Vesey street tea house, who sports a gold headed rosewood cane with two small diamonds in the top. Another queer thing is that heavy men—fat, ponderous fellows—usually affect light switch canes, while lean men and youths lug around a regular war club. It's funny, but none the less a fact. Two men of my acquaintance, members of the Hoboken Fat Men's association, are never seen on the street without little rattan switches. These cane cranks are superstitious, too; and some of them if they happen to be without a walking stick ever so short a time, are in constant fear of a run of bad luck."—New York Evening Sun.

A new book on Scotland tells the story of a Mr. Durham and his servant, who gave warning because he could not bear to be pointed at as "the man who had the leein maister." His rebuke was taken in good part, and he was instructed to give his master a nudge when he thought a story a little exaggerated. The story proceeds:—Not long afterward Mr. Durham was entertaining at dinner a party of friends, when he proceeded to describe some foxes he had seen abroad with tails twelve feet long. Peter gave his master a nudge, when Mr. Durham remarked to his guests, 'No, I am wrong. Not twelve; they were six feet long.' Peter administered a second nudge, 'Ah, well, on reflecting,' said Mr. Durham, 'I believe the animals' tails were not beyond three feet long.' Peter yet nudged, when Mr. Durham turned sharply round, and addressing his attendant, said gravely, 'Peter, if I reduce the tail further the story's gone."

SHINING CHRISTIANS.—A friend told me that he was visiting a lighthouse lately, and said to the keeper: "Are you not afraid to live here? It is a dreadful place to be constantly in."

"No," replied the man, "I am not afraid. We never think of ourselves here."

"Never think of yourselves! How is that?"

The reply was a good one:

"We know that we are perfectly safe, and only think of having our lights burning brightly and keeping the reflection clear, that those in danger may be saved."

Christians are safe in a house built on a rock which cannot be moved in the wildest storm, and in a spirit of holy unselfishness they should let their light gleam across the dark waves of sin, that imperilled ones may be guided into the harbor of heaven.—Exchange.

A female servant sweeping out a bachelor's room found a four-penny piece on the carpet, which she carried to the owner. "You may keep it for your honesty," said he. A short time afterward he missed his gold pencil case, and inquired of the girl if she had seen it. "Yes, sir," was the reply. "And what did you do with it?" "Kept it for my honesty."

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 11, 1887.

Massachusetts all Right.

Gov. Ames Re-elected Handsomely.

The voters of the Old Bay State turned out in unexpectedly large numbers Tuesday, and notwithstanding the dullness of the campaign all parties cast a heavier vote than last year or the year before. With one town to hear from the vote stands as follows: Ames, 135,968; Lovering, 118,359; Earle, 10,702; Scattering, 1234; total, 254. The total vote last year was 243,769, and the year before 209,668. Gov. Ames's plurality is 17,620. Last year it was 9463.

The Council contains its one solitary Democrat, as last year, while there are but nine in the Senate, against 11 last year. The Republican majority in the House is also larger.

Prohibition Candidate Earle expresses himself as satisfied with his vote, which is an increase of 2400 over last year. There was disaffection enough among the Democrats to more than account for that gain. The Prohibitionists have one senator from Bristol county, elected by disaffected Republicans.

District Attorney Dunbar's defeat was a very poor piece of work which the Prohibitionists did with their little hatchet, and is much to be regretted.

Hampden county has two Democratic senators – elect. In the eastern district Lawyer Lathrop could not hold the Republican vote, and Lawyer Spellman went in with a rush, having a plurality of 456 votes in a district which last year gave the Republican nominee a clear majority of 1062.

The Democrats are beginning to wonder if it really paid to lay themselves out so strongly in favor of the spoils doctrine.

IN OTHER STATES.

Oregon defeated a prohibition amendment to the constitution by 7000 or 8000 majority.

Maryland elected the Democratic state ticket; Virginia's Legislature will be strongly Democratic, and Mississippi is solid in the same line.

Ohio scored a good Republican victory, as also did Iowa, Nebraska and New Jersey. Rhode Island gained a Republican congressman in a postponed election in the western district.

New York elected a Republican Legislature, but Col. Fred Grant failed of election as secretary of state by about 25,000 votes. In New York city the boodlers are rejoicing over the defeat of Delancey Nicholl by Col. Fellows, the Democratic candidate for attorney general.

GOV. OGLESBY of Illinois has commuted the sentences of Schwab and Fielden, two of the condemned anarchists, to imprisonment for life. Lingg, the most desperate of the lot, cheated the gallows yesterday, the lower part of his head being torn away by a dynamite cartridge, resulting in his death in six hours. The remaining four, August Spies, Albert R. Parsons, Adolph Fischer and George Engel paid the penalty of their crime to-day on the scaffold.

A little girl, nine years old, was found intoxicated in Lawrence a few days ago. The woman of whom she obtained the liquor was arrested at the instigation of a Catholic priest, fined $75 and costs and sentenced to four months in the house of correction, but appealed the case.

Five men were blown to atoms at Bridgeport, W. Va., last Saturday, while smoking in a powder house, a spark dropping in a keg of powder.

Two negroes were burned to death by a mob at Montgomery, Ala., a few nights ago for an assault on a white woman.

Every one who heard W. H. H. Murray when he was here last year will be sure to be at the Congregational church next Tuesday evening, when he will give his new lecture, "A Great Yachting Cruise." This lecture was the result of a 20,000 mile yacht trip through the inland waters of America last summer, and cannot fail to be interesting and instructive. Tickets go on sale at the store of J. B. Shaw to-morrow morning.

Officer Dawson arrested Edward Henfield and Robert Crossman Wednesday, charged with the larceny of a sealskin cap from the clothing store of C. K. Gamwell on Main street. The youths were in the store making inquiries about the price of overcoats, and later a sealskin cap was missed. The officer overtook the boys between here and West Warren, and after searching found the missing article tucked inside the clothing of Crossman. Late in the evening the younger of the two was released, and returned to West Warren with his father.

THE ROYAL ARCANUM HUNT.

What game was left alive in the woods Wednesday night must have been pretty thoroughly scared. Twenty-two members of Quaboag Council, Royal Arcanum, had been scouring every thicket all day for any stray bird or animal which would score a point on the game list. Some went the night before on a 'coon hunt, but failed to secure one, and from the score it would seem as though all sorts of game knew there was to be a hunt; in fact the boys report that there was scarcely a thing alive in the woods that day, though some good strings were captured. The two sides were captained by F. C. Hatch and C. E. Fuller, and although only seven of Hatch's side hunted at all and some of them only half the day, he managed to score 755 points against his opponents 1040, who had fifteen men out. The game was all brought to the Weeks House, and made a fine showing. At nine o'clock thirty-three members of the council sat down to a supper such as only Landlord Weeks knows how to prepare, and the fact that the losing side had it to pay for did not seem to lessen their appetites in the least, and for nearly an hour ample justice was done to the good things. After supper speech-making was indulged in, nearly every one present being called upon. All voted the occasion a most enjoyable one, and were unanimously in favor of another hunt in '88.

HOW THE TOWN VOTED.

Palmer voters did not "enthuse" to any serious extent Tuesday, and but 627 votes were cast, against 636 last year. Everything passed off quietly, and at night a few of the more enthusiastic remained up to get the returns from other towns. The detailed result in Palmer was as follows:

A Midnight Robbery.

AT THE MUZZLE OF A REVOLVER.

A bold robbery was committed in one of the out districts of the town on the night of the 2d, the fact of which was not generally known until Saturday. On the night alluded to George Shaw and Adrian Miller, living near Palmer Center, were out hunting, and while homeward bound passed the house of Talma and Loman Brown, two aged farmers who have led an eccentric life since their youth, accumulating considerable wealth, which many believe is concealed about the premises. As the hunters approached the house they saw a light and shouted to the occupants, with whom they were acquainted, to come out and examine a large coon which they had just captured. At this point the light which was burning brightly inside was immediately extinguished, and the men, who were masked, rushed out with the salutation: "Throw up your arms, or die!" The hunters identified the burglars as being Daniel McGrath and Andrew Daggett of West Warren and Frank Little of Palmer, having seen them that night at an earlier hour near the house. Shaw reached for the revolver which was leveled at his head, and it was at the same time discharged, the bullet just missing him. A short time before this took place the house had been thoroughly investigated by two of the men, while the third guarded the two aged gentlemen with a revolver, threatening their lives unless they would disclose where their money was hidden. The Brown brothers declined to inform them of that fact. They searched some time and managed to secure some money, but just how much is not known. Sheriff Healy arrested Daniel McGrath at West Warren Friday night, and he was brought to this place and arraigned before Judge Brown at the district court Saturday morning, charged with being implicated in the matter. He pleaded not guilty, and was placed under $1000 bonds. He remained in custody until Monday afternoon when the required sum was secured and he was released. He will have a hearing here to-morrow. The other two burglars have escaped, but it is thought they will be captured, as Sheriff Healy has a clue as to their whereabouts. Frank Little is about 30 years of age, five feet six and one-half inches in height, of dark complexion, with brown eyes, dark hair, black moustache. He was born in Lawrence, and has been in the United States military service. Walter Crane, alias Andrew Daggett, of West Warren, came from Brighton, and is six feet two or three inches in height, about 23 years of age, with an entirely smooth face and slimly built. A large number of petty burglaries have occurred in the towns in this section within a brief period, and it is quite generally believed that the same gang is implicated in some of them.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

Our former townsman, Mr. Doolittle, was in town over Sunday.

F. Bramble of Ludlow is shipping quite a large amount of wood from this place to Springfield.

The portable saw mill, with engine and boiler, which has been in use here for some time, was moved to Hardwick the other day.

LUDLOW.

Mrs. Bly has been visiting in Boston.

A gospel service was held in the Union church Wednesday evening, when the Chicopee, Indian Orchard and Ludlow Center churches united with the Union church. A good number was present, and the meeting was a good one. It is expected that other union meetings will be held in some of the other churches in the future.

A grand sciopticon exhibition and lecture, by Mr. W. E. Hermance, will be given in the Union church to-morrow evening, under the auspices of the church society. Mr. Hermance has traveled from the Yellowstone park down the Yellowstone, Missouri and Mississippi rivers to the Gulf of Mexico in a canoe, and will tell and show his audience the wonders that he saw.

There is to be an auction sale of cattle and farming utensils, at Silas Billings's farm next Wednesday.

BRIMFIELD.

The Ladies' Union of the Second church have an oyster supper at the town hall this evening.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the First church had a sociable at the vestry on Thursday evening, with recitations, charades, readings, music, etc.

The election passed off very quietly, and the result, with the exception of the vote for representative, was a larger vote for the Republican ticket than expected. The Democratic candidate for representative took charge of his canvass in person, and by personal appeals to his own, and the other two parties, secured votes from all sufficient to give him a plurality of 12 votes, a gain of 25 over the regular Democratic ticket. This was a new departure, and gave rise to some adverse criticism. Whatever may be said of the merits or demerits of this course, it showed that the fears of a veteran Democrat, expressed election morning, "that their great drawback in the contest for representative was the bashfulness of their candidate," were groundless.

BELCHERTOWN.

M. P. Walker and family have gone to New York for the winter.

Miss L. D. Thompson of Smith College spent Sunday at her home in town.

The first meeting of the Chautauqua circle was held at Rev. W. F. Lawford's Monday evening.

A small party of young people were pleasantly entertained Tuesday evening by C. L. Randall.

A series of meetings were commenced at the Baptist church last Sunday under the direction of Rev. O. D. Thomas, state evangelist, and will continue through the week. All are invited to attend.

There was a great deal of political strife Tuesday as to who should secure the election for representative. The contest was so close at the convention that Myron Barton had only one vote more than P. W. Lyman, and of course they both were run for the office. Mr. Lyman was elected, but there is such a feeling in regard to the management of affairs that it will be a long time before the breach is healed, if ever. Of course the Democrats have taken advantage of the affair, and not a few of the grieved Republicans have promised the Democrats their votes in the coming elections.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

There was an old-fashioned raising at A. D. Seaver's Monday afternoon.

About sixty attended the first meeting of the Ladies' Society Wednesday evening.

The paper mill has a new superintendent, Mr. Charles Garvin, who succeeds E. F. Bartlett.

W. Rice has fallen heir to a thousand acres of land in Robertson county, Texas, besides other valuable property.

The grist mill is running by steam, the water in the river being quite low. The mill runs nearly every night till eleven o'clock.

The ladies of the Glendale M. E. church gave their annual harvest supper last Friday evening. W. R. Sessions spoke on agriculture. About $30 was raised.

Candidate Clark's wings got pretty badly clipped election day, but as long as one "gets there" it probably makes little difference whether he flies or crawls.

The great town hall trial was on for Thursday, but it has been postponed, and Lawyer Dunbar of Westfield has been appointed by the court as auditor to examine all papers, etc., the case being an intricate one.

One citizen who has been a life-long Democrat till within a very few years, is said to have had a huge bonfire Wednesday night to celebrate the Representative election. Not that he loved Clark more but Morgan less. Great is political principle.

A Republican was overheard asking the question Wednesday in reply to another Republican saying "Ames is undoubtedly elected," "Who is Ames?" thus showing that he did not know who he voted for the day before. Some people say it's only the Democrats who "go it blind."

WARREN.

Miss White of Andover has taken the situation of telegraph operator.

The public library have a number of new books which are being given out.

A new physician, Dr. Charles E. Perkins, homeopathist, has located in town.

The Till Family give a musical entertainment in the town hall next Saturday evening.

John Boswoth has purchased a wood lot of Dr. Hastings, and will soon have it cleared.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union met with Mrs. Warren Thursday afternoon.

The Lend a Hand society have a fair in the chapel of the Congregational church next Tuesday evening.

There was a union temperance meeting in the town hall last Sabbath evening. The pastors of the different churches conducted it.

The gas house at Sayles & Jenk's woolen mill was burned last Friday night at a loss of $500. Hereafter the premises will be lighted by electricity.

WEST WARREN.

William Sheehan has charge of lighting the street lamps now.

Some miscreant poisoned a dog belonging to Ethan T. Hall the other day.

George W. Allen's new house is being rabidly pushed forward, and will be finished soon.

The John E. Ince Comedy Co. played "Fun in a Boarding School" in Washington hall last night to a good sized audience.

Fred Figer, who keeps the No. 2 boarding house, was agreeably surprised by his boarders Saturday night and presented with a fine watch, chain and charm.

The union revival meetings were continued through this week as usual, except that the afternoon meetings were omitted. Rev. J. F. Mears and Rev. D. O. Clark of Warren assisted in the meetings last night and to-night.

The Beacon Light lodge of Good Templars installed these officers Monday night: Chief Templar, George W. Peacock; vice templar, Miss Della A. Clark; secretary, James Tait; financial secretary, William Chapman; treasurer, Robert Armour; chaplain, Mrs. Belle McFarlane; marshal, John Carey; guard, Miss Jane Cares, sentinel, James Ruddle; deputy marshal, Miss Mary Caldwell; assistant secretary, James Campbell; right hand supporter, Miss Nellie Brann; left hand supporter, Miss Mary Davis.

WILBRAHAM.

Three persons united with the Methodist church last Sunday.

Rev. M. S. Howard attended the association of ministers, which met in Springfield Tuesday.

Miss L. Keuff of Three Rivers has been the guest of Miss Nettie Milliken the past two weeks.

The Athena society of the academy will give an open society in Fisk Hall next Friday evening.

The Willing Workers met with the Misses M. A. and Bessie Pease Wednesday afternoon and evening.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the South church met with Mrs. Lorin Pease Thursday afternoon.

Prof. Raymond of the Academy gave a reading at the church in East Longmeadow last Thursday evening.

The ladies' societies of the academy—Pieria and Athena—had a most enjoyable time at their union meeting last Friday evening.

Dr. Flagg, who has recently opened dental rooms at his home on Main street, is doing a flourishing business, and George Campbell has a two-story building well under way in front of his old blacksmith shop on North street. The first floor is to be occupied by J. B. Green for a stove and tin shop. Mr. Campbell has moved into his new shop, and now has the finest blacksmith shop in town.

The Mount Hermon Mission Band of the Congregational church, at a meeting Tuesday evening, elected the following officers: President, Harry Dunbar; vice president, Thomas Freeburn; treasurer, Thomas W. Erwin; recording secretary, C. E. Winslow; correspondent, Hugh Scott.

Charles Hathaway, who is considered a dangerous character, in a melee Tuesday with William McIntire, of whom he had bought a farm, drew his revolver and fired at McIntire, the ball going through his clothing. The trouble was caused by Hathaway claiming he had bought the hay in the barn with the farm.

W. E Hermance, who has traveled from the Yellowstone National Park down the Yellowstone, Missouri and Mississippi rivers to the gulf of Mexico in a canoe, will give an illustrated lecture at the Methodist church this evening. Over 100 views, illustrating the scenery and personal incidents of the trip, will be shown.

The Bennett & Moulton Comic Opera Co. will be at the town hall three nights and a matinee, commencing next Monday. With the thorough advertising they have done, a good company to back it up, and low prices, they should do a good business. They will present "Mascot," "Olivette," "Chimes of Normandy," and "Pinafore."

One of our oldest citizens, Lyman Draper, died at his home on Church street Tuesday, being nearly 89 years old. He was born in Rhode Island, near Pawtucket, and came here from Pelham about 40 years ago. When he first came here he had a stove and tin shop in the place that is now occupied by George C. Holden. He has been quite feeble for a long time.

Jerome Gates, one of the oldest employes of the Otis Company, having worked for it 47 years, has tendered his resignation, to take effect the last of this month. He has had charge of the weaving department for 42 years. His home will be in Ware still, but it is expected he will spend a part of this winter with his son, A. A. Gates, who is proprietor of one of the finest hotels in the South, at Greenville, Georgia.

F. P. Clark & Co., have had the incandescent gas fixtures put into their store the past week, two burners lighting the store in the best manner. The Otis Company are soon to lay a new gas main through Main street, and with some new improvements in the manufacture of gas will no doubt, with the new burners, be able to compete successfully with any electric light. The company propose to put in the incandescent lamps for any who wish, renting them for a small sum to any who do not care to purchase.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent

BOSTON, Nov. 6, 1887.

At the Republican headquarters this morning a quiet, but jubilant feeling is prevalent. Successful candidates are there, shaking hands and receiving congratulations upon their election. Everybody was astonished at the size of the Republican majority. They had not expected that Ames would have over 10,000 plurality, and now that he leads by over 17,000 they make no pretense of concealing their deep satisfaction.

Now the question is, what was the cause of the unexpected result? for it is as great a surprise to the Democrats as it is to the Republicans. Above all other things, it seems to me, stands the character of the Worcester convention and its relation to the cause of good administration. That convention took the stand on a platform distinctly in favor of the doctrine that the offices are the spoils of the party in the majority. That is the doctrine which the people of the state are opposed to by the vote of the majority party in the Legislature, and by the convention of the majority party. Without question the cause of civil service reform stands better in the state than it did before the election. The people have distinctly put their disapproval upon the spoils doctrine more emphatically than ever, and both parties ought to learn a lesson from yesterday's voting. It will be a long time before another state convention of either party dares to put itself on the party of Patrick Maguire and his crowd of shouting spoilsmen from Boston. Their defeat has been signal and will stand as an impressive warning to all who are tempted to walk in their steps.

It is evident from the returns that the most of the mugwumps voted for Ames. Chairman Burden of the state committee said to me this forenoon: "I don't think that the Democrats realized the extent of the mugwump slide out from under their ticket. We are under great obligations to the mugwumps, and I am perfectly willing to say so freely." What he says can be verified by any one who takes the trouble to read the election returns. Besi le the mugwump vote, however, it appears also that in some places the "silver top" Democrats did not vote for Lovering. They preferred Ames and the backing he had to the crowd that was behind Lovering. Then there is another factor of a little consequence, of but a little, probably, however. When it was reported that President Cleveland had said that the election of Lovering would be an indorsement of his administration, one of the leaders of the party remarked that the president's opinion would cost them ten thousand votes—the idea being that if the election of Lovering would be an indorsement of the president, then they would not indorse him; very likely that effected a few voters, but not many.

Another factor in the great Republican success was the public school question, though it seemed at the time of the Democratic registration in Boston as if it was hurting the Republicans more than it helped them. Indeed, it is impossible to say how much effect this factor had, though Mr. Cunniff, since the election, has said it cost the Democrats 2000 votes in Boston alone. Dr. Barden also says that the issue was of help to the Republicans. By his directions a poster was put out in Boston headed: "Protect the Common Schools." Then followed an extract from the Republican platform and at the end the words: "Stand by the party that is pledged to stand by the common schools." No doubt that in the country districts the alarm against the parochial schools had much to do with the full vote that came out.

Now there is another point to be made in connection with the unexpectedly large Republican vote. It may be thought that there was no occasion for the Republican scare which resulted in so large a vote being cast. I do not believe it. All the signs pointed to Republican defeat unless the reserves were got out, and I believe that if the cry had not been successful, the Democrats would to-day be celebrating the election of Lovering. It was not an imaginary danger, and it was well that the reserves came out.

Now there is to be considered the bearing of this election on the presidential election next year. It has not nearly as much effect as the election in New York. From a remark of Senator Frye the other day, which I heard at only second hand, it appears that Mr. Blaine will be a candidate for the Republican nomination if he thinks that he can be elected, otherwise, not. Now the election in New York has shown that the Democrats have a very strong grip on that state, and so the result there will tend to make Mr. Blaine slow to enter the canvass. In this state the question has been more on the lines of civil service reform, and the result will show that a strong candidate in that respect will be the best sort of a candidate to nominate.

The result of the election in the Legislature has been most surprising, especially in the Senate. It was expected that the liquor-sellers' campaign would prove successful, and that the Republicans would lose in more districts than they would gain. But the reverse is the case and the Democrats have lost so heavily that they can muster only ten votes to the Republicans 30. This will put on the Republicans the responsibility of enacting temperance measures in both branches, for their lead in the House is also stronger than last year.

No contest will arise over the presiding officers of the Legislature, for both the present president and speaker are re-elected, and there will be no thought of defeating either Mr. Boardman or Mr. Noyes. They may rest perfectly assured that they will have to organize their respective branches, and they ought to have the committees ready promptly so that the Legislature can go to work at once.

The Congregationalist publishes to-day the result of a canvass it has made among the honorary members of the American Board on the question of sustaining the prudential committee in its refusal to send out missionaries who hold to the dogma of a future probation, and the result of over 450 answers is that the position of the committee is sustained by a vote of about three to one.

There is also published the acceptance by Rev. Dr. Storrs of the presidency of the American Board, to which he was elected at the recent Springfield meeting. It is a very important letter, for he discusses at length the policy which he thinks should be pursued. He is conciliatory, but thinks that the disputed dogma will not be heard from on the platform of the board for several years at least. He thinks that the board should take up at its next meeting the question of the relation of the churches to the board. LANDON.

I have not used all of one bottle yet. I suffered from catarrh for twelve years, experiencing the nauseating dropping in the throat peculiar to that disease, and nose bleed almost daily. I tried various remedies without benefit until last April when I saw Ely's Cream Balm advertised in the Boston Budget. I procured a bottle, and since the first days' use have had no more bleeding—the soreness is entirely gone.—D. G. Davidson, with the Boston Budget, formerly with the Boston Journal. 2w32

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

DON'T EXPERIMENT.

You cannot afford to waste time in experimenting when your lungs are in danger. Consumption always seems, at first, only a cold. Do not permit any dealer to impose upon you with some cheap imitation of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, but be sure you get the genuine. Because he can make more profit he may tell you he has something just as good, or just the same. Don't be deceived, but insist upon getting Dr. King's New Discovery, which is guaranteed to give relief in all Throat, Lung and Chest affections. Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. Large bottles $1. 6

A SOUND LEGAL OPINION.

E. Bainbridge Munday, Esq., County Attorney, Clay County, Texas, says. "Have used Electric Bitters with most happy results. My brother also was very low with malarial fever and jaundice, but was cured by timely use of this medicine. Am satisfied Electric Bitters saved his life."

Mr. D. I. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, saying: He positively believes he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters.

This great remedy will ward off, as well as cure all malarial diseases, and for all kidney, liver and stomach disorders stands unequaled. Price 50c. and $1, at LeGro & Lynde's 6

IN BRIEF, AND TO THE POINT.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existence. It is easy to put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many things which ought not to be, have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Greens August Flower has done a wonderful work in reforming this sad business and making the American people so healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember:—No happiness without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle. Seventy-five cents. 2

DR. SETH ARNOLD'S

Cough Killer

CURES COUGHS AND COLDS

PREVENTS

CONSUMPTION.

Arnold's Cough Killer, hearty man.—T. D. Paine 50c. and $1. Dr. Arnold's Biliousness, Biliousness, Headache, etc. 25c. 6m31nrm4p 2w33

Several Years ago a severe cold settled on my lungs. The physicians attending me said I had settled consumption, and gave me up. I WAS advised to try Dr. Seth Woonsocket, R. I. 25c., Bilious Pills for Costive-

Reciprocity.

Late I went into my mill,
Business was in briskest way;
Yet, as I o'erstepped the sill,
Slow, the pullies seemed to say:

We—are—working—by—the—day—
By the day—and—by the day—
We—are—working—by—the—day—
By the day—and—by the day.

This, I sadly sighed, is much
Slower than my pulses beat;
Far too slow, in fact, for such
Ends as I intend to meet.

Straightway said I to my men,
Henceforth by the piece I'll pay,
This for one and that for ten;
Then on business went away.

Coming home that afternoon,
Anxiously I turned the knob,
Lo! the pulleys hummed a tune—
Buzzing with impatient throb.

B' th' job, b' th' job, b' th' job, job, job,
B' th' job job job job job job job job.
B' th' job, b' th' job, b' th' job, job, job,
B' th' job job job job job job job.

Tell me reader, if you can,
Most was censure, theirs or mine?
And 'twixt man and man,
Where should justice draw the line?

REV. MULKITTLE'S BOY LEARNS ABOUT SAMSON.

"Pa," said the Rev. Mulkittle's son, "Samsom was a strong man, wasn't he?"

"Yes; Samson was the strongest man that ever lived."

"Tell me about him."

"It was intended that Samson should be the strongest man, and before he was born—"

The bewildered expression on the child's face arrested the minister in his narration.

"Before he was born?" asked the boy.

"Yes; before—that is before he was found in a hollow stum—"

"Just like little sister?"

"Just before he was found an angel appeared and foretold of his strength, saying that no razor must touch his head."

"Was the angel afraid that the razor would cut him?"

"No; the angel meant that his strength lay in his hair, and that his hair must not be cut off."

"If I let my hair grow long, can I lift more than I can now?"

"I don't know about that."

"Are women stronger than men?"

"No."

"But they've got longer hair?"

"Yes, they've longer hair."

"A woman couldn't whip you, could she?"

"No, not easily."

"Was Samson a Democrat?"

"I don't know."

"But why don't you know? I'd know if I was as old as you. How many men was it that Samson killed?"

"I don't know."

"He was bad wasn't he?"

"No."

"But when a man kills another he's bad."

"But the Lord was with Samson."

"But the Lord says you mustn't kill anybody. Did Samson go to Heaven?"

"I suppose so."

"He's the strongest angel there, ain't he?"

"You are getting foolish again."

"But I want to know. Will you know Samson when you go to Heaven?"

"I suppose so."

"But you won't fool around him, will you? If he was to hit you he'd break your wings, wouldn't he?"

"Go to your mother. The next time you attempt to question me on the Bible I shall whip you."—Exchange.

A LOOSE RAILWAY BAGGAGE SYSTEM.

But here I am speaking about railways and railroads, which brings me back to the baggage-room, where I came with much fear and trembling, remembering our unprotected bundles. I went behind the railing, and—they were safe, just as I left them in the morning. Everybody was busy, and no one paid any attention to me; so I took two of the packages, carried them to the train, and went back for the others, when the baggageman saw me.

"Ah!" he said, "help yourself. They are quite right, are they not?"

"Yes, thank you."

"No thanks. It is our business to keep these bundles for you. I wish I had an extra man to carry them to the train for you. But we can't do everything, you know. Is that all the baggage you had? I thought there were more of the parcels. There were certainly more when I looked at them a while ago."

"Oh, I came and got a part of them just now."

"Oh, did you? I didn't see you, you know; quite right, quite right; but it gave me such a start, lest you had lost some of them."

"And you didn't see me get the others just now?"

"No, indeed, 'pon my honor."

"Well," I said, "what was to hinder any one else from helping himself to my bundles, or a portion of them?"

"Nothing at all, I guess, you know. But we are all pretty honest."

"Certainly. But there might be some rascals travelling."

"To be sure. Quite right. But we haven't got things arranged by system yet.' I should say not!

Think of a city of a quarter of a million people transacting a baggage business in this primitive way!

AMOS KEETER.

There's a lively little creature which is known as Amos Keeter, and it couldn't be much fleeter if it tried.

It is ever sweetly singing while about you, swiftly winging, seeking out a place for a stinging through your hide.

In gore 'tis ever wadin' lanced from grandam and from maiden, till its veins are overladened with the stuff.

And yet, rich its diet, the small creature ne'er is quiet, and really can't come nigh it, which is tuff.

You think your're going to lam it, and against the wall you jam it, but it saddly mutters dammit, as it skips.

Oh, smart is Amos Keeter, on you very nose he'll teeter, and he says "this is my meat-er"

Confound the wretched creature; swells your every feature, as he bleeds you like a leech or dineth off your face.

Oh, if he sang in Eden, no stronge proof I'm needin' of the cause of the seceding from the place.

She stood in the press room of the country daily, where the agile "fly" of the press was slapping down the papers with admirable precision. She was a motherly looking creature, with a blue cotton umbrella. "That 'fly' delivers the papers at the rate of 1500 an hour," modestly remarked the proud proprietor. "Fifteen hundred an hour!" she exclaimed. "Mercy on us! you don't mean it! And then, moved by motherly instinct, she added: "What a place to spank a baby!"—Somerville Journal.

A MONTANA ROMEO.

Before the present theater was built a lady came to Butte as a Shakespearean reader. She was billed to give "Romeo and Juliet." The auditorium was a rough shed which held about 500 people. The stage was in keeping with the house. The lady had with her a wire dummy such as are used in retail stores upon which to exhibit garments. She had the dummy dressed up as Romeo, and spoke the lines of Juliet to it. Then by some transformation the figure was changed to Juliet, and the recitation of Romeo was given by the lady.

The 500 rough miners had never seen anything like this before. They sat before the readings dumbfounded.

When the recitation was over and the "garish lights had fled," and the lady and her manager had gone to their hotel, the miners went into the shed (theater) and took the wire dummy—it was dressed as Romeo—from the stage. They carted it about town all night, and into the saloons, bought it whisky by the gallon, poured it down its wire throttle, and shook it up and down, danced with it, and fairly howled. They returned it to the "theater" somewhat worsted, and left it on the stage. The following evening the lady was to repeat her programme. When she beheld the sorry plight of her Romeo she burst into tears and couldn't speak. One of them, seeing the lady's grief, stood up in his chair and made the following speech: "Boys, last night we got Romeo drunk. We had fun with him and a good time."

Then, turning to the lady he said: "But mum, we didn't mean to hurt your feelin's, 'pon honor, we didn't, mum. We ain't the men to hurt no woman that comes to this camp, and we're sorry for you. Now, boys, I propose to pass the hat to buy this lady a new Romeo, let every man chip in."

He passed the hat himself, and when he took it up on the stage there were 280 gold dollars counted out.

"You take this, mum," said the speaker, "and buy you a new one; and you won't feel hurt at us, mum, will you, for we didn't mean to hurt your feelin's."—Chicago Mail.

ORIGIN OF G. A. R.

Its originator was Dr. Benjamin F. Stephenson, a physician of Springfield, Ill., who had served as surgeon in the Illinois infantry during the war. He first suggested the idea in February, 1866. Published accounts state that Decatur, Ill., was the birthplace of the order, but the only living comrade of the four who were present at the first muster and mutually took the obligation, according to the ritual Dr. Stephenson had prepared, says that it was founded at Springfield.

The first formal organization of a post occurred, however, beyond question, on April 5, 1866, at the village of Decatur, which contain only forty-three Union soldiers.

Among the originators of the Grand Army of the Republic were Messrs. Coltrin and Pryor, proprietors of the Decatur Tribune and their compositors, who printed the first ritual of the Grand Army as written by Dr. Stephenson.

Soon after Post No. 2 was formed at Springfield, and others were quickly instituted throughout Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, Ohio, Iowa and Missouri.

On July 12, 1866, the first department encampment was held at Springfield, Ill. John M. Palmer was elected Department Commander.—New York Herald.

A FAMILY PRESCRIPTION.

Family man, in great haste, rushes into drug store—"b'g pawd'n, chemists. Can you put this up for me right away? In an awful hurry." Drug-store man reads prescription and turns pale. "I'm afraid I can't do it to-day, sir; I—I think we are out of some of the ingredients." Man of family takes back paper and reads—

"Half a dozen safety pins;
"Three nutmegs;
"A pound of West Chester butter;
"One quart cider vinegar;
"Two yards white flannel;
"A paper of needles;
"A box of Rough on Rats."

This was the shopping list his wife had given him. Then the prescription for himself that he got from the doctor must have been the paper that he threw out of the window. Thus does Jane W. HIS WIFE WAS ECCENTRIC.—A gentleman entered a phrenologist's office in Boston and asked to have his head examined. Where your parents eccentric?" "No, sir," replied the all around character, meekly, "but my wife is. You needn't pay any attention to the larger bumps, sir."—Burlington Free Press.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer as demonstrations of the unequalled excellency of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the greatest improvement in pianos in half a century. A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

A Rhyme of Thanksgiving.

The grain is threshed and stowed away,
The barn filled to its eaves with hay,
And blazing logs are heaped up higher
To form the farmer's winter fire.
The year's abundance gathered in,
Glad plenty reigns in barn and bin,
And cheerful faces by the hearth
Reflect the cheerful things of earth.

No more the farmer drives a-field
To gather in the harvest yield;
No more the happy farm-boys go
From field to farm-house to and fro.
Thrown open is the cellar-door,
With brown potatoes on the floor;
While heap on heap, and pile on pile,
Thy ruddy winter-apples smile.

Long rows of barrels, cider-filled,
From the clean-straw-packed press distilled,
With loosened bungs, for working free,
Give hints of lusciousness to be,
When apple bees are held at night,
And, by the farmer's fireside bright,
The rosy lads and lassies meet,
With added sweetness to the sweet.

And out upon the barn-floor wide,
By the great barn-doors, just inside,
The unhusked corn, a wondrous store,
Tells that the husking is not o'er.
Ah! how shall turn the maiden's head,
As startled by the ear of red,
She darts away, as to forsake
The coming kiss he longs to take.

Just by the corn, in row on row,
The golden-sided pumpkins glow,
Containing hints to youthful eyes
Of mother's golden pumpkin pies.
Within the fields, unchecked and free,
The turkeys gobble past each tree,
Oh, luckless turkeys, yet to learn
They must be gobbled in their turn!

The apples, drying in the sun,
Hang on their strings, and nearly done;
The brown nuts scattered on the rack
Are almost dried, and fit to crack;
The sleek, fat cattle seek the mow;
The meek-eyed ox, the patient cow,
Within the barn-yard all the day
Are loitering their time away.

Home from the various spots of earth,
To seek the farmer's cheerful hearth
Relations gather in the land,
For now Thanksgiving is at hand.
Mary, whose mission is to teach,
And John, who has a call to preach;
Jacob, who, born a farmer, now
Upon his own farm guides the plow.

And such a lot of little folks,
So full of nonsense and of jokes
That grandma says, with happy eyes,
She has no chance to cut the pies.
And now the neighbors, dropping in,
Help on the merriment and din,
And happy girls and boys at play
Are thankful, this Thanksgiving Day.

The dinner groans upon the board,
The foaming cider forth is poured,
The roasted turkey, plump and brown,
Is nicely carved and hurried down.
Preserves and jellies, pies and cakes—
Ah! just to think how many aches
The good things of this life inspire
Beside the farmer's cheerful fire.

And now the afternoon is gone,
The shades of night come slowly on,
And gathered by the crackling flames,
The happy group indulge in games;
"Puss in the Corner," "Blind Man's Buff,"
And "Hunt the Slipper"—not so rough—
And, oh, the overwhelming bliss
Of games whose forfeit is a kiss!

The fire has flickered slowly down,
The corners changed to Vandyke brown;
And, here and there, a pair apart,
Converse of matters of the heart.
A smack, a fair girl turns her head,
Her Vandyke brown has turned to red;
Is it the dying firelight's flush,
Or can it be the maiden's blush?

As home the happy couples go,
Across the fields just touched with snow,
Beneath his tread the frost's sharp crack
Repeats that surreptitious smack.
Her eyes are looking in his face
With tender trust and girlish grace;
When next Thanksgiving Day draws nigher,
Her hands shall build his winter's fire.

THE LAWYER'S CHOICE.

There was a young lawyer by the name of John Harlow practicing law in New York twenty years ago. John graduated with honors, had studied law, and had the good fortune to enter immediately into a partnership with his law preceptor, ex-Gov. Blank. So eagerly had he pursued his studies that for two years he had not seen his country home. I think one reason why he had not cared to visit it was that his mother was dead, and that his only sister was married and living in Boston. Take the "womenfolks" out of a house, and it never seems much like home to a young man.

But now, as Thanksgiving Day drew near, he resolved to give himself a brief release from the bondage of books. He told his partner that he wanted to go home for a week.

"John," said the old lawyer, "be sure you fix up a match with some of those country girls; no man is fit for anything till he is well married, and you are now able with economy to support a wife. Mind you get one of those country girls. These paste and powder girls here arn't fit for a young man who wants a woman."

"Governor," said the young lawyer, laying his boots gracefully up on top of a pile of law books, as if to encourage reflection by giving his head the advantage of the lower end of the inclined plane, "Governor, I don't know anything about city girls. I have given myself to my books. But I must have a wife that is literary, like myself,—one that can understand Emerson for instance."

The old lawyer laughed. "John," he answered, "the worst mistake you can make is to marry a woman just like yourself in taste. You don't marry a woman's head, but her heart."

The next morning John had a letter from his sister. Part of it ran thus:

"I've concluded, old fellow, that if you don't marry you'll dry up and turn to parchment. I'm going to bring home with me the smartest girl I know. She reads Carlyle, and quotes Goethe, and understands Emerson. Of course she don't know what I am up to, but you must prepare to capitulate."

John did not like Amanda's assuming to pick out a wife for him, but he did like the prospect of meeting a smart girl, and he opened the letter again to make sure that he had not misunderstood. He read again, "understands Emerson." John was pleased. Why? I think I can divine. John was vain of his own abilities and he wanted a woman that could appreciate him. He would have told you that he wanted congenial society. But congenial female society to an ambitious man whose heart is yet untouched is only society that, in some sense, understands his own greatness and admires his wisdom.

In the old home they were looking for the son. The family proper consisted of the father, good Deacon Harlow, John's two brothers, ten and twelve years old and Huldah, the "help." This last was the daughter of a neighboring farmer, who was poor and hopelessly rheumatic, and most of the daughter's hard earnings went to eke out the scanty subsistence at home. Aunt Judith, the sister of John's mother, "looked after" the household affairs of her brother-in-law, by coming over once a week and helping Huldah darn and mend and make, and by giving Huldah such advice as her experience was supposed to require. But now Deacon Harlow's daughter had left her husband to eat his turkey alone in Boston, and had brought her two children home to receive the parental blessing. Not that Mrs. Amanda Holmes had the parental blessing chiefly in view in her trip. She had brought with her a very dear friend, Miss Janet Dunton, the accomplished teacher in the Mt. Parnassus Female Seminary. Why Janet Dunton came to the country with her friend, she could hardly have told. Not a word had Mrs. Holmes spoken to her on the subject of the matrimonial scheme. She would have resented any allusion to such a project. She would have repelled any insinuation that she had ever dreamed that marriage was desirable under any conceivable circumstances. It is a way we have of teaching girls to lie. We educate them to catch husbands. Every super-added accomplishment is put on with the distinct understanding that its sole use is to make the goods more marketable. We get up parties, we go to watering places, we buy dresses, we furnish our houses, to help our girls to a good match. And then we teach them to abhor the awful wickedness of ever confessing the great desire that nature and education have combined to make the chief longings of the heart. We train them to lie to us, their trainers; we train them to lie to themselves; to be false with everybody on this subject; to say "no" when they mean "yes;" to deny an engagement when they are dying to boast of it. It is one of the refinements of Christian civilization when we pray the Woman's Missionary Society not to communicate to poor ignorant heathens who know no better than to tell the truth about such things.

But, before I digressed into that line of remark, I was saying that Miss Janet Dunton would have resented the most remote suggestion of marriage. She often declared, sentimentally, that she was wedded to her books, and loved her leisure, and determined to be an old maid. And all the time this sincere Christian girl was dying to confer herself upon some worthy man of congenial tastes; which meant, in her case, just what it did in John Harlow's—some one who could admire her attainments. But, sensitive as she was to any imputation of a desire to marry, she and Mrs. Holmes understood one another distinctly. There is a freemasonry of women, and these two had made signs. They had talked about in this wise:

Mrs. Holmes—My Dear Janet, you'll find my brother a bear in manners, I fear. I wish he would marry. I hope you won't break his heart, for I know you wouldn't have him.

Miss Dunton—You know my views on that subject, my dear. I love books and shall marry nobody. Besides, your brother's great legal and literary attainments would frighten such a poor little mouse as I am.

Mrs. Holmes and her friend had arrived twenty-four hours ahead of John, and the daughter of the house had already installed herself as temporary mistress by thoughtlessly upsetting, reversing, and turning inside out all good Huldah's most cherished arrangements. All the plans for the annual festival that wise and practical Huldah had entertained were vetoed, without a thought that this young girl had been for a year and a half in actual authority in the house, and might have some feeling of wrong in having a guest of a week overturn her plans for the next month. But Mrs. Holmes was not one of the kind to think of that. Huldah was hired and paid, and she never dreamed that hired people could have any interest in their work or their home other than their pay and their food. But Huldah was patient, though she confessed that she had a feeling that she had been rudely "trampled over." I suspect that she had a good cry at the end of the first day. I cannot affirm it, except from a general knowledge of women.

When John drove up in the buggy that the boys had taken to the depot for him, his first care was to shake hands with the old deacon, who was glad to see him, but could not forbear expressing a hope that he would "shave the hair off his upper lip." Then John greeted his sister cordially, and was presented to Miss Dunton. Instead of sitting down, he pushed right on into the kitchen, where Huldah, in a calico frock and a clean white apron, was baking biscuit for tea.

"Why, Huldah, how you've grown!" were his first words of greeting. He meant more than he said, for though she was not handsome, she had grown exceedingly comely as she developed into a woman.

"Undignified as ever!" said Amanda, as she returned to the sitting-room.

"How?" said John. He looked bewildered. What had he done that was undignified? And Amanda Holmes saw well enough that it would not do to tell him that speaking to Huldah Manners was not consistent with dignity. She saw that her remark had been a mistake, and she got out of it the best she could by turning the conversation. Several times during the supper John addressed his conversation to Huldah, who sat at the table with the family, for in the country in those days it would have been considered a great outrage to make the "help" wait for the second table. John would turn from the literary conversation to inquire of Huldah about his old playmates, some of whom had gone to the west, some of whom had died, and some of whom had settled into the same fixed adherance to their native rocks that had characterized their ancestors.

The next day the ladies could get no good out of John Harlow. He got up early and milked the cow. He cut wood and carried it in for Huldah. He rode old Bob to the brook for water. He did everything that he had been accustomed to do when a boy, finding as much pleasure in forgetting that he was a man, as he had once found in hoping to be a man. The two boys enjoyed his society greatly, and his father was delighted to see that he had retained his interest in farm-life, though the deacon evidently felt an unconquerable hostility to what he called "that scrub-brush on the upper lip."

John was not insensible to Janet Dunton's charms. She could talk fluently about all the authors most in vogue, and the effect of her fluency was really dazzling to a man not yet cultivated enough to see how superficial her culture was. For all her learning floated on top. None of it had influenced her own culture. She was brimming full of that which she had acquired, but it had not been incorporated into her own nature. John did not see this, and he was infatuated with the idea of marrying a wife of such attainments. How she would dazzle his friends! How the governor would like to talk to her! How she would shine in his parlors! How she would delight people as she gave them tea and talk at the same time. John was in love with a new tea-urn or a rare book. She was a nice thing to show. Other people than John have married on the strength of such a feeling, and called it love. For John really imagined that he was in love. And during that week he talked and walked and rode in the sleigh with Miss Dunton, and had made up his mind that he would carry this brilliant prize to New York. But, with lawyer-like caution, he thought he would put off the commitment as long as possible. If his heart had been in his attentions the caution would not have been worth much. Caution is a good breakwater against vanity; but it isn't worth much against the spring-tide of love, as John Harlow soon found.

For toward the end of the week he began to feel a warmer feeling for Miss Janet. It was not in the nature of things that John should walk and talk with a pleasant girl a week, and not feel something more than his first interested desire to marry a showy wife. His heart began to be touched, and he resolved to bring things to a crisis as soon as possible. He therefore sought an opportunity to propose. But it was hard to find. For though Mrs. Holmes was tolerably ingenious, she could not get the boys or the deacon to pay any regard to her hints. Boys are totally depraved on such questions, anyhow, and always manage to tumble in where any privacy is sought. And as for the deacon, it really seemed as if he had some design in intruding at the critical moment.

I do not think that John was seriously in love with Miss Dunton. If he had been he would have found some way of communicating with her. A thousand spies with sleepless eyes all around their heads cannot keep a man from telling his love somehow, if he really has a love to tell.

There is another fact which convinces me that John Harlow was not yet very deeply in love with Janet. He was fond of talking with her of Byron and Milton, of Lord Bacon and Emerson, i. e., as I have already said, he was fond of putting his own knowledge on dress-parade in the presence of one who could appreciate the display. But whenever any little thing released him for the time from conversation in the sitting-room, he was given to slipping out into the old kitchen, where, sitting on a chair that had no back, and leaning against the chimney-side, he delighted to talk to Huldah. She couldn't talk much of books, but she could talk most charmingly of country life, and she could ask John many questions about the great city. In fact, John found that Huldah had come into possession of only such facts and truths as could be reached in her narrow life, but that she had assimilated them, and thought about them, and that it was more refreshing to hear her original and piquant remarks about the topic she was acquainted with, than to listen to the tireless stream of Janet Dunton's ostentatious erudition. And he found more delight in telling the earnest and hungry-minded country girl about the great world of men and the great world of books, than in talking to Janet, who was, in the matter of knowledge, a little blasé, if I may be allowed the expression. And then to Huldah he could talk of his mother, whom he had watched moving about that same kitchen. When he had spoken to Janet about the associations of the old place with his mother's countenance, she answered him with a quotation from some poet, given in a tone of empty sentimentality. He instinctively shrank from mentioning the subject to her again; but to Huldah it was so easy to talk of his mother's gentleness and sweetness. Huldah was not unlike her in these respects, and then she gave him the sort of sympathy that finds its utterance in a tender silence—so much more tender than any speech can be.

He observed often during the week that Huldah was depressed. He could not exactly account for it, until he noticed something in his sister's behavior toward her that awakened his suspicion. As soon as opportunity offered he inquired of Huldah, affecting at the same time to know something about it.

"I don't want to complain of your sister to you, Mr. Harlow"—

"Pshaw! call me John, and as for my sister, I know her faults better than you do. Go on, please."

"Well, it's only that she told me that Miss Dunton wasn't used to eating at the same table with servants, and when one of the boys told your father he was mad and came to me and said, 'Huldah, you must eat when the rest do. If you stay away from the table on account of these city snobs I'll make a fuss on going to the spot.' So to avoid a fuss I have kept on going to the table."

John was greatly vexed at this. He was a chivalrous fellow, and he knew how much such a remark must wound a person who never learned that domestic service had anything degrading in it. And the result was just the opposite of what his sister had hoped. John paid more attention than ever to Huldah Manners because she was the victim of oppression.

The evening before Thanksgiving Day the ladies were going to make a visit. It was not at all incumbent on John to go, but he was seeking an opportunity to carry off the brilliant Miss Dunton, who would adorn his parlors when he became rich and distinguished, and who would make him so nice a headpiece for his table. And so he had determined to go with them, trusting to some fortunate chance for his opportunity.

But, sitting in the "best room" in the dark, while the ladies were getting ready, and trying to devise some way in which he might get an opportunity to speak with Miss Dunton alone, it occurred to him that she was at that time in the front sitting-room waiting for his sister. To step into the room where she was, and present the case in a few words, would not be difficult, and it might all be settled before his sister came down stairs. The fates were against him, however. For just as he was about to act on the thought, he heard Amanda Holmes' abundant dresses sweeping down the stairway. He could not help hearing the conversation that followed:

"You see, Janet, I got up this trip to-night to keep John from spending the evening in the kitchen. He hasn't a bit of dignity, and would spend the evening romping with the children and talking to Huldah if he took it into his head."

"Well," said Janet, "one can overlook everything in a man of your brother's culture. But what a queer way your country servants have of pushing themselves. Wouldn't I make them know their places!"

And all this with the kitchen door open, and with the intention of wounding Huldah.

John's castles tumbled. The erudite wife alongside the silver tea-urn faded out of sight rapidly. If knowledge could not give a touch of humane regard for feelings of a poor girl toiling dutifully and self-denyingly to support her family, of what account was it?

Two minutes before he was about to give his life to Janet Dunton. Now there was a gulf wider than the world between them. He slipped out of the best room by the outside door and came in through the kitchen. The neighbor's sleigh that was to call for them was already at the door and John begged them to excuse him. He had set his heart on helping Huldah make mincepies, as he used to help his mother when a boy. His sister was in despair, but did not say much. She told John that it was time he was getting over his queer pranks, and the sleigh drove off.

For an hour afterward John romped with his sister's children and told stories to the boys and talked to his father. When a man has barely escaped going over a precipice he does not like to think too much about it. John did not.

At last the little children went to bed. The old gentleman grew sleepy and retired. The boys went into the sitting room and went to sleep, on the lounge one and one on the floor. Huldah was just ready to begin her pies. She was deeply hurt, but John succeeded in making her more cheerful. He rolled up his sleeves and went to rolling out pastry. He thought he had never seen a sweeter picture than the young girl in clean dress and apron, with her sleeves rolled above her elbows. There was a statuesque perfection in her well-rounded arms. The heat of the fire had flushed her face a little, and she was laughing merrily at John's awkward blunders in pie-making. John was delighted, he hardly knew why. In fixing a pie-crust his fingers touched hers, and he started as if he had touched a galvanic battery. He looked at Huldah, and saw a half-painful expression on her flushed face.

For the first time it occurred to him that Huldah Manners had excited in him a feeling a thousand times deeper than anything he had ever felt toward Janet, who seemed to be now in another world. For the first time he realized that he had been more in love with Huldah than with Janet, all the time. Why not marry her? And then he remembered what the governor had said about marrying a woman's heart and not her head.

He put on his hat and walked out—out, into the darkness, the drizzling rain and slush of melting snow, fighting a fierce battle All his pride and all his cowardly vanity were on one side, all the irresistible torrent of his love on the other. He walked away into the dark wood-pasture, trying to cool his brow, trying to think, and (would you believe it?) trying to pray, for it was a great struggle, and in any great struggle a true soul always finds something very like prayer in his heart.

Turning back, he stood without the window, in the shadow, and looked through the glass at the trim young girl at work with her pies. In the modest, restful face he read the story of a heart that had carried great burdens patiently and nobly. What a glorious picture she was of warmth and light, framed in darkness. To his heart at that moment, all the light and warmth of the world centered in Huldah. All the world beside was loneliness and darkness and drizzle and slush. His fear of his sister and friends seemed base and cowardly. And the more he looked at this vision of the night, this revelation of peace and love and light, the more he was determined to possess it. You will call him precipitate. But when a man's nobility is on the one side and all his meanness on the other, why hesitate? Besides, John Harlow had done more thinking in that half-hour than most men do in a month.

The vision had vanished from the window and he went in and sat down. She had by this time put in her last pie, and was sitting with her head on her hand. The candle flickered and went out, and there was only the weird and ruddy firelight. I cannot tell you what passed between John and the surprised Huldah, who had thought him already engaged to Miss Dunton. I cannot tell what was said in the light of that fire; I don't suppose Harlow could tell that story himself.

Huldah asked that he should not say anything about it till his sister was gone. Of course John saw that she asked it for his sake. But his own cowardice was glad of the shelter.

Next day a brother of John's (whom I forgot to mention before) came home from college. Mrs. Holmes's husband arrived rather unexpectedly. Aunt Judith, with her family, came over at dinner time, so there was a large and merry party. Two hearts, at least, joined in the deacon's thanksgiving before dinner with much fervor.

At the table the dinner was much admired.

"Huldah," said Janet Dunton, "I like your pies. I wish I could hire you to go to Boston. Our cook never does so well."

John saw the well-aimed shaft hidden under this compliment, and all his manhood rallied. As soon as he could be sure of himself he said:

"You cannot have Huldah: she is already engaged."

"How's that?" asked Aunt Judith.

"Oh! I've secured her services," replied John.

"What!" said Mrs. Holmes, "engaged your—your—your help before you engaged a wife!"

"Not at all," said John; "engaged my help and my wife in one. I hope that Huldah Manners will be Huldah Harlow by Christmas."

The deacon dropped his knife and fork and dropped his lower jaw and stared. "What! How! What did you say John?"

"I say, father, that this good girl Huldah is to be my wife."

"John!" gasped the old man, getting to his feet and reaching his hand across the table, "you've got plenty of sense if you do wear a moustache! God bless you, my boy; there ain't no better woman in New York nor anywhere than Huldah. God bless you both. I was afraid you'd take a different road, though, and am mighty glad you didn't."

"Hurrah for Huldah and our John," said George Harlow, the college boy, and his brothers joined him. Even the little Holmes children hurrahed, and the lady conspirators swallowed their defeat as best they could.

FACING DEATH FRIVOLOUSLY.

"It is more than passing strange to me," said a down-town minister, "how little the immediate prospect of death seems to affect some people. The disposition of their immortal souls seems but secondary as compared with their appearace in the coffin and their funeral arrangements. The other day I was called to the bedside of a young lady who was very ill. While I was there the physician gravely shook his head and said the patient would die that night. She looked a little put out, and when the doctor went, I asked if I might pray, and was requested to wait a few moments. I retired to another room, and to my surprise I heard the young woman ask her mother for some paper, in which she proceeded to put up her hair, remarking at the same time: 'Mamma, do not take the papers out of my hair until I am in the coffin, for I might as well look as nice as I can, since there will be so many come to see me.' Ah, you newspaper men always smile at such things, but it was simply awful to me."—Philadelphia Call.

ENJOYING THE PICTURE.

A lady who resides on Delaware avenue has a girl in her employ from a region far removed from the theater. Thinking to give the girl a grand treat, the lady purchased a ticket for a play at the opera house. The girl went, but returned before 9 o'clock.

"What's the matter? Did you not like it," asked the mistress.

"Oh, I liked it ever so much; it's a fine painting."

"But," inquired her mistress, "why have you returned so soon? Surely you didn't see it all!"

"Yes, ma'am, I did. I went in and sat down and looked at the picture hanging up in front. People kept coming in and soon there was quite a crowd all looking at the picture. Then they took it away, and some men and women went to talking up there where it had been about something that didn't concern me, so I got up and came home. But I enjoyed the picture."—Wilmington News.

THE SOUTH POLE.—What we know of the South pole, then, is simply this: That nobody has got within 700 or 800 miles of it. That icy barriers were encountered which quite eclipse anything known in the North frigid zone; that mountains have been seen, one shooting forth volcanic flames, loftier than any discovered by our northern explorers; that all the land there is covered with snow at all seasons; that no human being has been met with beyond 56 degrees; that no vegetable growth, except lichens, has been seen beyond 58 degrees, and that no land quadruped is known to exist beyond 66 degrees.—Cleveland Leader.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 18, 1887.

REV. CHARLES A. BERRY of Wolverhampton, Eng., has been called to the pastorate of Henry Ward Beecher's church, at a salary of $10,000 a year.

CHICAGO has been annexing some of her suburban towns, and now claims to be the third largest city in the United States, with a population of 886,000.

SECRETARY LAMAR informed Land Commissioner Sparks the other day that one of the two must resign, and the latter has accordingly done so. Mr. Sparks appears to be too big a man for his place.

WASHINGTON correspondents have settled it that Secretary Lamar is to be elevated to the supreme court bench, Postmaster General Vilas being transferred to the interior department, while he will be succeeded by Don M. Dickinson, a prominent Michigan lawyer.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., enjoys the rare distinction of licking the Bell telephone monopoly. Last year over 400 business men had their instruments taken out, because of excessive rates, and the company now comes around and will probably accept their propysition of lower rates than before the strike.

DENIS KEARNEY, the "sand-lots orator" of California, grows wiser with advancing years, and gives sound advice in these words:

Workingmen, you cannot benefit your condition by listening to madmen or parading behind red flags. To elevate yourselves you must become American citizens and barricade yourselves behind the American ballot.

THE city of Cambridge is extremely fortunate in having a son who remembers her so munificently as has Frederick H. Rindge of California, formerly of that city. He recently gave money and land for a public library, and has now promised a new city hall, a site for a high school, and an industrial school for boys, his gifts aggregating nearly half a million of dollars.

RECEIVER JOSLYN of the Stafford National Bank reports the liabilities of that institution at $301,626, with assets amounting to $310,021, leaving the munificent sum of $8395 for the stockholders, to which is to be added the cashier's bond of $15,000 and several thousand dollars from his property; but this will not make a very large dividend on the capital stock of $200,000. Cashier Hicks seems to have made a very clean sweep. A committee has been appointed by the stockholders to examine the affairs of the bank and report as to the advisability of reorganizing and resuming business.

GERMANY is considerably disturbed by the official announcement that the crown prince has a cancerous growth in his throat which dooms him to an early death. This means much to the nation, as the present emperor cannot in all probability survive more than a year or two longer at the outside, and the son of the crown prince, who will ascend the throne upon the death of his father and the emperor, is a hot-headed youth, filled with the war spirit, who will be more than likely to seek military glory by turning from the paths of peace to those of war and bloodshed.

JESSE POMEROY, the boy fiend, though now a full grown man, made another attempt to escape from the state prison last Thursday. After his recent cutting of iron bars, steel bars of great strength was put into his cell, and he then turned his attention to digging out the mortar from the stone wall. He cut the gas pipe, and in some way caused an explosion, which rendered him unconscious and exposed his work. Pomeroy is the most dangerous convict in the state. How he obtains the implements with which he does his work is a mystery, but he is possessed of a spirit of devilish cunning which the utmost watchfulness can hardly control.

HARTFORD may well feel disgusted with a clergyman who will compare the anarchists to Christ, and say that "The Chicago men wanted not disorder, but the highest peace; they acted in conformity to the high laws within them. The destruction of law and statutes would leave us to governed by natural laws or no prescribed law, and we should do right because it is our nature. The guidance of the laws of his nature are enough for the anarchist, and the true anarchist is so pure that he will be led absolutely right." This is the language of Rev. J. C. Kimball, pastor of Unity church in that city, last Sunday. No wonder that the Courant exclaims:

That a Hartford pulpit should contain a man who likens the God-hating, law-hating, malignant, murdering Chicago anarchists to Jesus Christ of Nazareth is cause for shame in this law-loving, and, we trust, Christian community.

THE funeral of the Chicago anarchists on Sunday passed off quietly, with a large procession and an immense crowd. And now let us hope that anarchy may have a rest. The hanging of these men has called out many wild expressions from socialists through the country, but it has also demonstrated the majesty of the law, and even the most rabid anarchist will hesitate before making himself liable to a visitation of the same law upon his head. But there ought to be no more dallying with this monster, and every person who preaches the murderous doctrines of the anarchists ought to be promptly placed in confinement. The sooner cattle of this kind are made to understond that they cannot propagate this sort of stuff, the better it will be for the country.

John Most, the New York anarchist who has already served one term in jail for his violent utterances in public, used more of the same sort at an anarchist meeting last Saturday, has been arrested again, and stands a good chance of serving another sentence.

The mayor of Albany has issued a proclamation advising people using river water to boil it, on account of the prevalence of typhoid fever in the city.

Mrs. Sarah Howe, of Boston Woman's Bank notoriety, started a similar business at Chicago, but was found out and left the place.

President McCosh of Princeton has resigned on account of his age, after 20 years of faithful service.

W. H. H. Murray gave his new lecture, "A Great Yacht Cruise," to a small audience at the Congregational church Tuesday evening. The storm doubtless kept many at home, but those who were present were well pleased with his description of the scenery on and about the Richelieu, St. Lawrence and Saguenay rivers.

The case of Daniel McGrath, for participation in the robbery of Talma and Loman Brown, was heard at the district court room last Saturday, and continued until to-morrow. The evidence was pretty strong against him, and during the trial his sister, who was in the court room, fainted away, and was obliged to be taken from the room.

Last Saturday a man appeared at L. E. Ferry's stable with a horse which he wanted to trade, and Ferry, thinking he saw a chance to better himself, traded, but soon after found that the animal he possessed had been stolen from a stable in Warren. The thief's name is W. H. Robinson, and the officers hope to have him in custody soon.

What might have been a bad fire was prevented by timely discovery last Saturday afternoon. Smoke was noticed coming from the shingles and sides of Barney Galleher's house on South Main street, and an examination showed the woodwork around the chimney to be badly charred and almost ready to blaze up, but it was put out without much difficulty.

By the way, didn't the town adopt some by-laws not long ago, and vote to have them presented to the superior court for approval? There has been one term of the court since then, and nothing has been heard of the by-laws. If they are ever to be put in force they should be presented at the December term of court, without fail, as the local officers are powerless to act on them until they are opproved.

James Waterman, a well-known figure about town, has just been granted an original pension, after many years of vain attempt to secure one. Waterman served more faithfully in the war than many who have drawn large pensions for years, but on account of the death of surgeons who attended him in the hospital, and the unknown whereabouts of witnesses, he has been unable to procure one. He is getting well along in years, with failing health, and this new help will be gratefully received.

A good story in connection with the Royal Arcanum hunt has just leaked out. One hunter on the winning side brought in two handsome ducks, which he claimed to have shot in the swamp near Bondsville. No one had ever seen any such birds about this section, and they were pronounced genuine canvas-backs. It has transpired, however, that the birds were raised by a Three Rivers man, and that after breaking the wing of one the hunter fired four shots before he secured it. The rest of the hunters say that this way of getting game is New to them.

The programme for the second Thomas' concert in Springfield is already made up, and it promises to be the most brilliant and satisfactory entertainment ever given in this section. There is great interest manifested to hear Fraulein Aus der Ohe, whose playing is likely to fire the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. Her reception at the Worcester festival in September was a perfect ovation, and no pianist ever appeared there, not even excepting Rubinstein, who created the "furore" that did this talented yet unassuming German girl.

Burglars do not seem to have very good luck in Palmer. Monday night one of them attempted to enter the house of Russell Moffatt, on the corner of School and Park streets. A board with cleats on it, which had been used by the painters on Wales Hall block, was carried to Moffatt's house and placed under a window. Up this the operators climbed, but left after removing the screen, being evidently novices at the business. Tuesday evening Mrs. Kate Young, living on Fox avenue, discovered a man in the back room of the house, and screamed for help. The fellow went from there to the tenement above, frightening the occupants, who also joined in the cry. He finally made his e-cape, followed by two bullets from Mrs. Young's revolver, which unluckily failed to reach their mark.

W. C. Dewey, who lately purchrsed a controlling interest in the Palmer Carpet Company, held a conference with the employes Wednesday afternoon, and offered to start up the mill again with a reduction of wages which amounts to a cut of about ten per cent. He claimed that by so doing he would be enabled to bid lower on contracts than he could at the present prices, and so would secure more orders, thus giving the employes steadier work in the long run, and not forcing them to be idle so much. The employes held a meeting yesterday forenoon and agreed to accept the proposition, and the mill will be started up again a week from next Monday. Andrew Pinney, who has been the superintendent for a number of years, has resigned, to take effect December first, and it is rumored will be succeeded by W. R. Parks of this place.

THE NEW FIRE ALARM.

The electric fire alarm is now in working order, and the only objection offered is that the slow strokes of the box number will not be rapid enough to wake the firemen up at night. The strokes are struck in about the same measure as those of the town clock, and being on the same bell will be hardly noticed by a sound sleeper near by, and not heard at all by a man living a few squares away, and it is doubtful if the citizens will feel satisfied with this arrangements. When an alarm is pulled in it is struck in three different places—on the bell in the Universalist church tower, in the house of the chief engineer, and in the engine house, where it is proposed to finish off a room and have two men sleep. Keys to the several boxes are located as follows: Box 48, corner of Knox street and Foster avenue, keys at houses of Cyrus Knox, J. A. Palmer, A. L. Hills and J. B. Shaw; box 57, corner Main and Walnut streets, keys at Marcy's livery stable, Converse House, Nassowanno House, and at Boston & Albany signal tower; box 63, on South Main street, near C. E. Dewey's, keys at Weeks House and at the houses of C. E. Dewey, Barney Galleher and J. S. Loomis. After an alarm is rung in the one who opens the box cannot get his key out until one of the engineers comes and releases it for him. Cards explaining the workings of the system are being printed, and will be distributed in a few days.

They Think It Is A Ghost.

BUT DON'T KNOW.

This village has at last been visited by that ever unwelcome guest familiarly known as a "spook," and feared more especially by the female population. The "spook," according to assertions of authoritative parties, is seen nightly between the hours of 8 and 11 o'clock prowling around in the vicinity of Fox avenue, South Main and Dublin streets. It has been operating now for over a week, attacking ladies who are compelled to traverse that section in order to reach their homes, until they have become so frightened that they dare not venture out unaccompanied. Miss Annie Grady, a tailoress employed at H. W. Munger's, was accosted by the object, which volunteered to walk beside her, and demanded money. She become much frightened after walking a short distance, and ran to the nearest house for protection with the "spook" in close pursuit, following her into the yard. Investigation was immediately made, but the object quickly disappeared. It was seen again Wednesday evening by the same person, but she escaped unmolested. Two ladies were chased a long distance Tuesday evening and were greatly alarmed, while several others who reside on Dublin street have met with exactly the same experience. Late Wednesday night the object was seen on the premises of Mrs. Kate Young on Fox avenue, who courageously fired the contents of a revolver at it. It is asserted that the alleged "spook" entered the house occupied by Mrs. Lee on Fox avenue Tuesday night, and investigation verified the statement. As the apparition approached the house cries of "murder!" and the firing of revolvers caused it to depart, and aroused the entire neighborhood. The "spook" is described as appearing in a long black shroud which trails the ground. The object is unusually tall and slim, and has a peculiar looking hat drawn tightly over its face. The fire which occurred on South Main street some time ago, destroying several houses, left a lonely pile of ruins, especially at night, and it is there the "spook" is frequently seen coming from the old cellar holes. Such a sensation has been created in that portion of the village that the authorities were notified, and Wednesday night Sheriff Healy, together with Officers Dawson, Crawford and McQuaid, made a thorough investigation of that territory, stationing themselves in different localities and remaining on guard until 11 o'clock. Officers Dawson and McQuaid state that in the vicinity of 10 o'clock an object which would answer to the above description was seen floating around. An attempt was made to capture it, but of no avail, and they are of the opinion that the alleged "spook" is a person who resides in town that is slightly "off" in his upper story.

BONDSVILLE.

The French Catholics commenced a fine days' fair in A. O. Parent's block Thursday evening. The object is to raise money toward building a church here, as Three Rivers is too far away.

Friends of "Uncle" Jesse Morse visited him Monday evening, and Rev. J. W. Fulton as spokesman of the party presented him with a nice easy chair as a pleasant reminded of his eighty-second birthday. Uncle Jesse was taken completely by surprise, and though somewhat overcome, managed to respond in one of his characteristic speeches.

WALES.

There will be a grand Thanksgiving ball in Royce's Hall next Wednesday evening, with music by Fairchild's orchestra.

Mrs. Eliza J., wife of Judius M. Lyon, was buried last week, the funeral being at her home. Mrs. Lyon was a lady of rare Christian character, and although a sufferer from disease for more than a year, has shown great fortitude and patience. She will be greatly missed among a large circle of friends. Mr. Lyon has the sympathy of the entire community in his bereavement.

Skunk hunting has been quite the rage among some of our amateur and professional hunters. One man recently made a paper skunk and tied a string to it, got some of the "boys" out to see the fun and sent for some of the crack shots to come and kill it. They came, got safely behind a tree, out of reach of the skunk, as they said, and fired, then turned and ran. As the perpetrator of the joke ran with them, with string attached, the skunk followed, and one young man actually changed his clothes, as he did not fancy the smell. It is quite an art to successfully kill a skunk of that kind.

The lady members of Local Assembly 6452, Knights of Labor, give their annual concert and ball in Washington hall tonight. Messinger's orchestra is to furnish music, and W. G. Ryan of Springfield will prompt.

A good story has just leaked out concerning the pastor of a church not so very far away, and a neighbor who is not in the habit of attending church regularly. The neighbor, while sawing wood one day, said to the minister who stood near him, that he had rather go to church than to saw wood. Whereupon the clergyman said he would saw the wood if the other would go to church the next Sunday. The agreement was made and the minister sawed the half cord of wood and then had the satisfaction of preaching to his way*ward* neighbor, but whether he was filled with re*morse* is not stated.

THREE RIVERS.

Workmen from Ware are putting concrete walks in the yard of the Palmer mill. They have already finished a walk in front of the mill office, and a crossing from the mill to the common.

The road between A. L. Haynes's and the Catholic church has recently been repaired. Russell Jenks had charge of the work, and the many improvements he has made will be greatly appreciated by the people who frequently travel over that road.

Next Sunday at the First Baptist church the theme in the morning will be "The Prond Man's Disappointment." In the evening at 7 a lecture will be delivered by a converted Jew. Subject, "The Jews: their Manners, Customs and Literature." A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Trudeau & Rivers, having been much annoyed of late by a crowd of loafers who congregate every night on and around the steps of their store and the post office building, have given orders to the constable to arrest all persons found loafing there. Men and boys who have made this a lounging resort would do well to read and comply with the notice which has been posted in the office bearing the signature of the selectmen.

St. Patrick's church was the scene of two very pleasant weddings Tuesday. At nine o'clock Dr. John Hassett, a graduate of Monson Academy, class of '84, was married to Miss Katie Brennan. The bride wore a goblin blue travelling dress and she looked as sweet as a bride could wish to look. Directly after the ceremony the pair returned to Mr. Brennan's where they received a number of their friends. Among the presents were two gold napkin rings, and a ladies' gold watch and chain from Mr. and Mrs. Brennan. Dr. and Mrs. Hassett went to New York on their bridal tour, and will reside at Lee. At 10 o'clock John Herlihy and Katie Connors were made one. The bride's dress was an elegant brown watered silk, and exceedingly becoming. The reception which followed the marriage was held at the house of Michael O'Brien. Among the presents were silver spoons, a pair of blankets, a lamp, a silver pickle jar, china dinner set and silver spoon holder, gold lined. Mr. and Mrs. Herlihy are spending a few days in Worcester. Father Lee was assisted at both ceremonies by Father McCoughen.

Winslow; tyler, John Lashua.

Fire Mystery Solved.

THE INCENDIARY BEHIND THE BARS.

Thomas Moriarty, living at the west end of Eddy street, was arrested Sunday by Officers L. A. Fisherdick and Maurice Fitzgerald, on charge of arson made against him by William N. McNamara, a detective from Boston, and the inhabitants of Ware may now sleep soundly at night with no more fear of the fire-bug that has been at work here for some time past. On a bitter cold night last March two tenement blocks on West street, owned by Henry F. Barnes, were fired, and a large amount of damage done in spite of the good work of our firemen. Work was soon commenced to rebuild, and when nearly completed, on the 20th of June they were again fired, with but little doubt that in both cases the fires were of incendiary origin. An investigation was held by the selectmen and a large number of witnesses were examined by them, but without, as far as the public knew, getting any nearer the solution of the question in hand, and the matter was apparently allowed to drop. But not so in reality, for August 29th posters were printed, offering "$1250 reward, as follows: Town of Ware, $500; Henry F. Barnes, $500; National Board of Fire Underwriters, $250; for the detection, conviction and punishment of the party or parties who fired the uncompleted dwelling house of Henry F. Barnes on the 20th of June 1887." These posters were not put up in Ware, and but few, if any, except the printer and the selectmen knew of them, but they were sent to several detective agencies in different parts of the country, and about September 12 William F. McNamara of Boston, who has an office with Detective J. P. Wade, made his appearance in Ware and was employed by the selectmen for one week to look into the affair, at the end of which time he was ready to go on with a prospect of receiving the reward for his compensation, and has for two months devoted the most of his time to this case. He soon learned that Thomas Moriarty had made fierce threats against Henry F. Barnes and Luther Carroll, on account of their attempting to get their pay for remodeling Moriarty's barn into a dwelling house, but which was burned before completion. On learning something of this McNamara made the acquaintance of Moriarty, representing he was a criminal himself, fleeing from justice, that he had left New Haven to avoid arrest for burglary there, and secured board with Moriarty, as being more retired than at any of the public boarding houses of the village. After a time he so gained the confidence of Moriarty that he told him he had set several fires in Ware the past two years. It is reported that he said the first was the house of Malcom M. Campbell, but if so, it is not believed by Mr. Campbell or the selectmen, as Moriarty did not at that time live neighbor to him, and never had any trouble with him, not even an acquaintance. He said he next burned his own barn and then the two tenement blocks on West street. Of course the detective professed some knowledge of such work, but was assured by Mo

At the society above named they have made a canvass of the Senate to see how it stands on the liquor question, and find a good proportion in favor of further restriction. Following the plan of Mr. Faxon, the Senate has been classified as three-star, two-star, one-star and dash men, according to their degrees of soundness on the prohibitory issue. Out of the 40, there are 19 who are put down as three-star men. These are Messrs. Clark of Hampshire, Clark of Essex, Cook of Essex, Fletcher of Middlesex, Gleason of Worcester, Gleason of Plymouth, Howland of Bristol, Keith of Plymouth, Keith of the Cape, Kingsley of Middle ex, Ladd of Worcester, Marble of Worcester, Messenger of Bristol, Palmer of Middlesex, Pike of Essex, Stevens of Norfolk, Sleeper of Middlesex, Towne of Franklin, and Walker of Essex. The two-star men are Messrs. Hartwell of Worcester, Southworth of Suffolk and Tucker of Norfolk. The one-star men are Messrs. Glines of Middlesex and Kimball and Sprague of Suffolk. Then come the dash men, or the incorrigibles, so supposed. They are President Boardman, and Messrs. Collins of Suffolk, Crosby of Berkshire, Dwyer of Suffolk, Hathorne of Suffolk, Howard of Bristol, Perkins of Hampden, Roads of Essex, Shea of Suffolk, Sullivan of Suffolk, Slattery of Middlesex and Spellman of Hampden. This leaves three unplaced,—Messrs. Howe and McAlpine of Essex and Wheelock of Worcester. The House has not been canvassed yet.

People who have money to invest in western farm mortgages want to make careful inquiries before putting their savings into places where they cannot get it out,—principal and interest. Some of the companies are undoubtedly sound and will make better investments that can be made here by those who do not have favorable opportunities for getting at the bottom facts. They have good guaranteed six per cent mortgages which are doubtless perfectly safe. But there are a few companies which take risks larger than safety seems to warrant, and investors ought to be pretty careful not to be bitten by them. Instances are narrated of land that has been valued at far more than what it will sell for, just for the purpose of raising a large sum on it and then allowing the interest to be defaulted and the mortgage to be foreclosed. I was told yesterday of a case in Colorado where the valuation has been increased to a fabulous figure just for the purpose of getting a large sum of money on the property. It does not follow that a piece of land is worth what it is valued at by the persons in the neighborhood, for A may say to B: "I want to raise a good sum on my farm and you want to do the same with yours. If you will say that my land is worth twice as much as it is, I will do the same for you and we will both get what we want." This is done in some cases and the eastern investors get bitten. So look out.

The parochial school question has not passed out of sight by any means with the election. It is kept before the public by a circular which has been sent out by Mr. E. C. Carrigan, a member of the state board of education, nominally on the subject of evening schools, but containing the following question which covers more than appears on its face: "The number of private schools, day and evening. The number of pupils of school age attending thereat. The method of approving private schools as provided by sections 1 and 2, chapter 47, Public Statutes." Now the most of those questions relate to parochial (private) schools, and have no connection with the object of the main part of the circular. This thing wants to be watched, for the decree of the Baltimore council of a few years ago stands just the same, for all our recent election.

The Beverly Farms issue will be prominent in the Legislature again, for the Republicans down there are angry because votes of their own party helped to elect Sam Roads, the only Democrat elected from the county, and if the Republican Candidate had got his party vote, he would have been elected. So they are saying now that they will divide the town and take the question forever out of politics.

Scarlet fever is very prevalent in Boston now.

LANDON.

The proprietors of Salvation Oil, the greatest cure on earth for pain, will pay a large reward if any certificate published by them is not found genuine.

Tom, Dick and Harry appear again with their Grandmother's recipes for coughs, etc., but the people know Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup too well.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Its record of forty years is one triumph over blood diseases.

Have you taken a cold? You can cure it promptly with Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. The safest remedy for throat and lung troubles.

Pond's Extract for pains and aches. Try it! It gives immediate relief, then permanent cure. The genuine is reliable. Imitations will disappoint you.

I have been a great sufferer from catarrh for over ten years; had it very bad, could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep—had to walk the floor. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely, it is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the one medicine above all others made to cure catarrh, and is worth its weight in gold. I thank God that I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it. It is curing my deafness.—B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn. 2w34

The one shoe store in Springfield which has the widest and best reputation for shoes and boots of every description, Morse's old stand, has lately taken on a gilt-edged appearance, because of the interior improvements. Broadhurst Bros., the proprietors, are as smiling as ever, rejoicing in the increased comfort and numerous bargains which they offer their out-of-town patrons.

UGLY AND HATEFUL,

but I couldn't help it. Everything went wrong with me, and I thought I hadn't a friend in the world; dyspepsia caused this, and for months I couldn't eat anything, and just suffered in misery till I used Sulphur Bitters. Three bottles cured me.—D. Lewis, 22 Bowdoin Street, Boston, Mass. 2w33

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle. 1y8ow

PERSONAL.

Mr. N. H. Frohlichstein, of Mobile, Ala., writes: I take great pleasure in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, having used it for a severe attack of Bronchitis and Catarrh. It gave me instant relief and entirely cured me and I have not been afflicted since. I also beg to state that I had tried other remedies with no good result. Have also used Electric Bitters and Dr. King's New Life Pills, both of which I can recommend.

Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, is sold on a positive guarantee. Trial bottle free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 1y29

WONDERFUL CURES.

W. D. Hoyt & Co., wholesale and retail druggists of Rome, Ga., say: We have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery, Electric Bitters and Bucklen's Arnica Salve for four years. Have never handled remedies that sell as well, or give such universal satisfaction. There have been some wonderful cures effected by these medicines in this city. Several cases of pronounced Consumption have been entirely cured by use of a few bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery, taken in connection with Electric Bitters. We guarantee them always. Sold by LeGro & Lynde. 1y29

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

THE BEST SALVE in the world for Cuts, Bruises, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains, Corns, and all Skin Eruptions, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by Legro & Lynde. 1y29

GIVE THEM A CHANCE!

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend on this for certain. 1y46eow

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, ss. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, creditors and all other persons interested in the estate of Harriet A. Lawrence, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas Selah W. Lawrence, of said Palmer, named as executor in the will of said deceased, which was approved and allowed in said court, on the fourteenth day of September, now last past, has presented to said court his petition praying to be exempt from giving a surety on his official bond as such executor, in accordance with the request of the testator expressed in said will, and of the only next of kin expressed in the petition for the probate thereof.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Palmer, in said county of Hampden, on the fourth Wednesday of November, next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, for three successive weeks, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper published at Palmer, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-ninth day of October, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-seven.

PLAIN MISS CAREW.

I shall never forget that happy summer at Harpswell, a quaint old peninsular town up the Casco bay. I don't know just how we happened to go there, but how pleased every one was with the old-fashioned houses and the cottages built on the banks of pretty coves, and the Atlantic booming and thundering and foaming right under our windows! Dear little cottages, with piazzas and balconies and slender chimneys, and poplars bending over the roof lovingly! And strong, more substantial farm-houses, with narrow windows and tiny panes of glass; gardens filled with poppies and dahlias, and always beautiful; perfumy lilacs, meadows fresh with buttercups and clover and full marguerites. Deep green woods, fields of corn, and every where a great quantity of roses. And such massive, rugged rocks, and grand views from the hills overlooking the sea; and all over the island that peculiar, hoarse, musical sound called the "rote," comes in from the ocean and adds a plaintiveness to the lovely summer days.

We were a party of seven boarders at Mrs. Sennett's cottage at the head of Lowell's Cove. It was in reality a stout old house, but some romantic wanderer had named it "Pearl Cottage," and as such we knew it. It was the most beautiful spot imaginable. Had it been a veritable Eden there could have been no softer beauty than greeted us on every hand. A wide garden brightened the space between the bank and the house and filled the air with perfume. The cove was shaded by huge willows of a hundred years' growth, and many birds sang in their branches. The soft, caressing breeze tinged our cheeks with healthy color, and the July sun added a not unbecoming brownness.

Almost unconsciously we drifted into familiar, friendly intercourse, and were happy and easily pleased. Nature, in her grand moods, shames us out of our artificiality. No one reproved a loud laugh, a leap, or a run down the level road. We were all so happy and gay and brimming over with spirits, it was simply impossible to be dignified, and curb our unruly and boisterous natures.

We were having a delightful row one evening, and returned rather late. There was a light in the sitting room contrary to our custom, and a trunk and bag on the piazza.

"Somebody has come," cried May Derry. "Here's a man's trunk—I can tell by the canvas—and, yes, here's a card. Oh, girls! what do you think? It is that Mr. Skidmore we saw the day we went to the neck! Isn't it splendid?"

"So it is," said May's sister. "Come here, all of you. 'Mr. E. Skidmore.' I wonder how he ever happened to come here. Won't we have a jolly time?"

"Victoria," expostulated her mother.

"Well, well, a nice-looking young man doesn't come to Harpswell every day. You haven't seen him, Miss Carew," turning to the plain, dark-eyed girl. "He is immensely wealthy, and has a real gold-brown beard, and fluffy yellow hair, and blue eyes, with brown spots in them, and—"

She might have gone on for an hour had not a hearty laugh from inside the room startled her.

"I beg your pardon," said a deep voice, and a tall figure appeared in the doorway, "but the description was too amusing," and again a merry laugh broke from him, in which we all joined.

"I suppose I was very rude," said Miss Derry, "but the deed is done, and I guess we'll go in and have some lunch."

"If she would only not say, 'I guess,'" whispered her mother. "It is quite plebeian."

We found Mr. Skidmore a delightful addition to our party. Of good family, wealthy, a thorough man of the world, and handsome, he had everything in his favor. The Derrys were, to use Victoria's phraseology, "over head and ears in love with him," and the gentlemen voted him a capital fellow. He played croquet with a steady arm and never-failing stroke, rowed well, sang delicious little songs in a tender manly voice, read aloud when it was too hot for exercise, and made himself a most attractive companion. From the first he seemed to positively dislike plain Miss Carew. In our games he avoided her noticeably, never willingly looking at or speaking to her. Did she propose an excursion, he declined to participate; did she sing sweet, old-fashioned songs we liked so much, he left the room. One evening she had crimson rosebuds in her hair, and he said crimson rosebuds were his special aversion. Once in stepping from the boat, coming from a sail, he offered his hand to assist her, and almost flung her ashore. He seemed to have taken an unaccountable antipathy to her.

One morning I was braiding my hair when there came a rap on my door, and Miss Carew asked to come in. She was dressed in a blue flannel boating suit, and a white sundown was pulled down over her face. Knots of scarlet ribbon were on her sleeves and down the front of her dress. I noticed an unusual color in the brown cheeks, and her brown eyes were moist-looking.

"You have been crying, Miss Carew," I said; "are you unhappy?"

"Not exactly unhappy, Miss Arden," she answered, in her slow, sweet, legato voice. "Only troubled, and rather vexed."

"Can I help you?"

"No, thank you. You are very kind, but it is nothing, after all. I came to ask if you will be good enough to let me take your umbrella? I am going to the east shore and have been stupid enough to let Miss Derry take mine."

"Certainly," I said; "and if you—"

A loud, boyish laugh interrupted me.

"Now, let me in, quick! I've something to tell you, Miss Arden!" and May Derry burst into the room. "I've found out all about Miss Carew," she said breathlessly, "and why Mr. Skidmore hates her and all. I have just— Oh! Miss Carew!" she cried, "I didn't see you. I beg your pardon. Dear me! I am sure, if I had known—"

"I beg you won't feel distressed. If you have "found out all about me," perhaps you will have the charity to enlighten Miss Arden?"

"It's nothing at all," she blurted out; "only Miss Payne came over, and said you belonged to the Carews of New Jersey, and they were a bad lot—fast men and vulgar women—and I told her I didn't believe it. And then she asked Mr. Skidmore, and he said he detested a vulgar woman, and could tell in a moment if they had good birth and breeding, and— Oh, Miss Carew, I haven't made you angry, have I? Of course, I didn't really believe her."

"It is all true," said Annie Carew, quietly. "I didn't consider it necessary to tell my affairs to everyone. And now, if you will get the umbrella, Miss Arden, I will go."

When we were alone, I said: "Now, May, tell me why Mr. Skidmore dislikes Miss Carew."

"I'll tell you all he said, Miss Arden. Miss Payne said there was a mystery about Miss Carew, and hinted at something rather reflecting on her character; and Mr. Skidmore said it was her family was ruining her. Miss Payne told me afterward that he hated Miss Carew because she had entrapped his brother into an engagement. This was two years ago, and it is all broken off now. Mr. Skidmore would not hear of it, I believe, and wrote to Miss Carew, telling her his brother would be an outcast from his family if he married her, and asked her to set him free. It seems that she didn't really care for him, but he was wild about her, and they dritted into an engagement. The whole family thoroughly disliked her, and Miss Payne said no respectable people visited them. They live in a fast set, and Miss Carew goes all about with no chaperone and, I believe, gets dreadfully mixed up with gossip. Mr. Skidmore would be glad never to see her again.

She stopped for sheer lack of breath, and I said, feeling a sort of scorn for a man who could so speak of a woman: "Miss Carew may be all you say, but until I know more about it I shall treat her as I always have. And as for Miss Payne, she is a low, gossiping woman to repeat such a tale."

She stared at me in amazement.

"I had no idea you were so fond of her," she said. "Do you know they say she is called very fascinating? I have rather pitied her because she was so plain."

"What became of Mr. Skidmore's brother?"

"Oh, I believe he married somebody else, But I must go now. You are not offended, Miss Arden?"

"No," I said, laughing; "not with such a giddy tom-boy as you are."

I was greatly surprised by what May had told me. For the first time I suspected there was another nature in Annie Carew than the indolent, careless one we saw. There might dangerous fires sleep under those soft, brown eyes. There might be hidden depths under that cold exterior. And, now I thought of it, she wasn't so very plain. She had beautiful eyes, brown and clear looking; delicate eye-brows, full red lips, and masses of soft, dusky hair. If her face was dark and thin, it was also full of character. Certainly she was not to be pitied.

I was rather fearful as to how she would treat May, but at teatime she came in smiling, and apologizing for being so late. There was not a trace of any unpleasantness in the smooth face. She laughed a great deal, and showed me a sketch she had made; a ridiculously long-necked bird was perched on the umbrella, and in its mouth a bit of scarlet ribbon, over which it seemed puzzled. There was real expression in the small, uncanny eyes, and I laughed heartily.

"How well you sketch, Miss Carew!" said May, who was looking over my shoulder.

"Yes; that is one of my Bohemian proclivivities. One learns many things like that traveling over the world without a chaperone."

There was no malice in the tone. It seemed merely an explanation. Mr. Skidmore looked up quickly, and then went out of the room, abruptly. Miss Carew laughed.

"Have I shocked anybody?" she asked, lightly.

"Come out on the beach," I whispered. And when we were alone, I said, "Tell me about it, Miss Carew."

It was in substance what I had heard once before that afternoon. She cared nothing for the boyish lover, and was glad to have the engagement broken, but the insolent, unjust words of Mr. Skidmore had hurt her cruelly.

"Why," she said, "I suppose he hates me as he hates no one else in the world."

"And do you dislike him?"

"Miss Arden, I despise him."

"I am very glad to hear it, believe me," and a tall figure strode past us down the beach. Miss Carew burst into a laugh.

"I have added the last straw now," she said.

After that there was not even the semblance of politeness between them. Each ignored the other's existence. We walked and talked and played croquet indolently, as before. Mr. Skidmore was always with Victoria Derry, and I was drifting into a dangerous liking for one of our company, a man with neither money nor good looks. I think we were all moderately happy, but I was alarmingly so. All through the month we were favored with fine weather. May Derry said she was "full to bursting" of pure delight. Living was a pleasure, and life a grand holiday. Once or twice we all went to Brunswick for a drive, but for the most part of the time were lying under trees, or in the warm sand, Crusoe-like, reading or thinking. All the fishermen have high tenor voices at Harpswell, and sing songs of the sea, and wear old straw hats and look picturesque. It was pleasure enough to sit on the rocks and hear their melody rising free and unrestrained while they mended their nets. It was beautiful, too, to watch the shadows coming over the tree tops, and the hush of night falling on all the land.

One night we were out in the boat, and Mr. Price drew in the oars and let the boat drift. It happened unfortunately that Annie Carew was placed beside Mr. Skidmore, making it uncomfortable for both. I soon forget it, however, in watching the beauty of the beach and ocean in the mellow, softened light, and drinking in the sweet fragrant air.

"Such a scene as this brings up sleeping memories," said Mr. Skidmore. "With the glamour of this soft beauty on a man he might be forgiven for almost any rashness. I am strangely susceptible to moonlight and the fragrant spring air. Miss Carew, won't you favor us with a song and break the spell?"

It must have affected him indeed to cause him to speak like that, in that half-tender voice to Annie Carew.

"I shall be happy to oblige you if you really desire it."

"Oh, yes, do sing, Miss Carew," said several voices.

She sang a little boating song, all about "waves" and "ripples" and "the sands upon the shore," and she sang it beautifully. I felt like falling in love with her, she looked so handsome, and there was a haunting pathos in the voice. Certainly Annie Carew was not a plain girl. She was a dangerously fascinating one. I realized it fully as she sat there in the moonlight, her splendid epes sparkling and her clear voice touching one's heartstrings so closely. Bohemian she might be; she was more beautiful in that tender, gracious mood than any woman I had ever seen.

There was silence for a moment; then Mr. Price said:

"You sing like the sirens of old, Miss Carew, if one can judge from ideas. The tears almost came, in spite of my endeavors to be manly."

She laughed softly, and Miss Derry said in an earnest way, "I do really believe I have fallen in love with her."

That made us all laugh, and the little craft was turned homeward. Mr. Skidmore walked up to the house beside me, and I asked him if he liked Miss Carew's singing.

"Yes, I did," he answered; "and I wish I could understand her real nature."

He was more polite and friendly toward her after that, and I began to hope for an established basis of good feeling between them, when an unlucky accident set them on the old path.

I was tying up a rosebush one morning, and had nearly finished when my supply of string gave out. Mr. Skidmore put his hand in his pocket and drew out a handful of different sizes of cord, when a little ribbon fluttered to the ground.

"Oh, that's Miss Carew's bow," cried May. "Miss Carew, he has had it all the time."

A flush rose to his lips, as he said, in an annoyed tone: "The very fact of its being in my possession shows that I had no idea what it was."

"Oh, but you did know, Mr. Skidmore, for I told you about it the day she made the sketch. Don't you remember the bird took it in his bill from the umbrella? Where did you find it?"

Miss Derry, I really have no idea how the thing came in my pocket. I assure you I should not have cherished it, had I known it was—a lady's property."

"Why, it is no great harm, anyway. If you like Miss Carew—"

"But I don't like Miss Carew. That is, Miss Derry, I don't like to be teased."

His face was flushed with annoyance, and I sighed as I thought of the mischief I had done. They were really getting to see each other in quite a fair light, until now all his old dislike was revived. And Annie, too, seemed to think him more disagreeable than ever, for at dinner she scarcely noticed him. In the afternoon she came to my room for a book, saying she was going to the cave on the east shore for a while.

"I'm so sorry about that ribbon," I said. "It shows him in his true light, Miss Arden. I am glad of it, for I was just getting foolish enough to think I had been mistaken in him.

It was a sultry, oppressive air, and I was too indolent to go out, so I took "Baddeck" and a sofa for the afternoon. I read until nearly four o'clock, and then fell asleep. When I awoke it was raining furiously and was quite dark. Then as a heavy peal of thunder startled me I remembered Miss Carew. I went across the passage and tapped, and looked in. The room was empty. I went hurriedly down the stairs, and into the sitting-room.

"Here comes Miss Arden, looking as if she had seen a ghost," said Mrs. Derry, smiling.

"Miss Carew is out in this storm," I said, feeling as if I should faint, "and some one must go for her."

"My God!" Miss Arden, what do you mean?" asked Mr. Skidmore, turning white to the lips.

"Miss Carew went to the cave this afternoon and has not returned, and I fear she has lost her way."

"It is sure death," began May, when there was a heavy trampling of feet on the piazza, and in a moment two men were in the room, and had put poor Annie Carew on the sofa. Her long hair hung wet and tangled to the floor, and the white face was death-like in its dreadful calm. In a moment I knew what it was.

"She is dead!" said some one in a constrained, harsh voice, "and never knew how I loved her. Oh, Annie, my darling, my love." And Mr. Skidmore fell on his knees beside her and kissed the sweet lips.

One by one we stole out of the room and left him kneeling there. The men had found her on the shore, and thought she must have fainted from fright, and had brought her home.

"Likely the lightnin' killed her," said one. "I've known such things!"

I went to my room and wept bitterly. "Poor Annie Carew!" was all I could say. Poor, unhappy girl. At the thought of Mr. Skidmore my tears flowed afresh. I was scarcely surprised that he loved her. But his pride had buried his happiness.

Later in the evening May tapped at my door. She was crying softly. "Oh, Miss Arden," she said, "she wasn't dead after all. It was only a fainting fit, and she can speak now."

"And Mr. Skidmore?"

"Is there with her, and he has been crying. I guess it's all right between them, because I saw him kissing her just now."

And all the time he had been in love with plain Miss Carew.

It has been discovered that the average length of time that the $12,000 a year clergyman is able to work without becoming a physical wreck and having to be sent abroad is seven months. The $10.000 man can stand it eight months; he who receives $7000, nine months; the $5000 preacher, 10 months—and so on; but the man on a $500 salary works right along all the year round and don't break down. Who can explain this?—Tid Bits.

Barber (to customer)—You are quite bald sir.

Customer (who isn't conversationally inclined)—Yes, I was born that way.—Epoch.

THAT FEELING

Of exhaustion expressed in the words "all run down," indicates a thin and depraved state of the blood, reacting upon the nervous system. Nothing will reach this trouble with more speed and certainty than Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"I was all run down," writes Mrs. Alice West, of Jefferson, W. Va., "before I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and now I am every day. I intend using it till my strength is perfectly restored."

"Being very weak and despondent after an illness which caused frequent loss of blood, I tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and two bottles have restored me to my former health," writes Miss Blanche S. Brownell, 4 Boylston Place, Boston.

The Incurable Cured.

HOPKINSVILLE, KY., Feb. 24th, 1887.

Gentlemen—Seven years ago a sore developed on my nose from a finger nail scratch. I tried a few simple remedies, but the sore would not yield. I grew worse every year for seven years. Many thought I had a cancer. Over a year ago I commenced taking S. S. S., and two bottles entirely cured me. When I began with Swift's Specific I was in very poor health, and could hardly drag about. After I had finished the course of S. S. S. I was strong and bouyant, and had a good appetite. I regard it as a most valuable medicine for ladies in weak, delicate health. It is a household medicine with me. Yours respectfully,

MRS. R. W. WILSON.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., April 2, 1887.

Gentlemen—For twenty years I have had a sore on my left cheek. It had gradually been growing worse. The many physicians whom I had consulted were unable to do me any good. Last fall a year ago I began using S. S. S. At first it inflamed the sore, and it became more virulent than ever; so much so, indeed, that my family insisted that I should leave off the medicine. I persisted in using the S. S. S. At the end of two months the sore was entirely healed. Thinking that the evil was out of my constitution, I left off the medicine; but in November, ten months after, a very slight breaking out appeared. I at once began again on S. S. S., and now that is also disappearing. I have every faith in S. S. S. It has done me more good than all the doctors and other medicines I ever took.

Yours truly,

A. R. SHANDS.

WINSTON, N. C., April 12, 1887.

Gentlemen—Two or three years ago a cancer came on my face. It soon grew to be quite large. It wore on me, and my general health was very poor. Last September I began a course of S. S. S., which I have continued to the present time with the happiest result. The cancer has entirely disappeared, there being no evidence or symptom of a cancerous character left. My general health is good now, and my appetite better than it has been in years. I am 82 years old, and to-day I am working in the field planting corn. Yours truly,

JONAS LIMEBACH.

Gentlemen—I had a sore on my upper lip for eight years. Seven different doctors attempted in vain to heal it. One gave me a small vial for five dollars, which was a "certain cure." It is needless to say that it did me no good. About two years ago I became quite uneasy, as people thought I had a cancer, and I took a course of eighteen bottles of S. S. S. The result has been a complete cure. The ulcer or cancer healed beautifully, leaving scarcely a perceptible scar. From that day I have been in excellent health, the Specific having purified my blood thoroughly, increased my appetite and perfected my digestion. In a word, I feel like a new woman, and, best of all, the eight year ulcer is gone entirely. Yours sincerely,

MRS. W. P. CANNON.

Trouble in the Choir.

There was something so unusual in the singing of the choir
That the elder looked up mildly from the tenth of Jeremiah,
And with readjusted eyeglass looked along the foremost row,
While a hundred necks were twisted in a stare from all below.

As before the rolling thunder comes a distant, wailing moan,
There was prestage of disturbance in the very organ's tone,
Just the popping of the pickets ere the battle's awful din,
Or tuning of the fiddle ere the orchestra begin.

An unprejudiced observer might have seen with half an eye
There was waiting an explosion that would blow them all sky-high.
Or spontaneous combustion, to accept the modern name,
That was waiting just a motion to burst forth into flame.

The Soprano sat in grandeur, with her book before her face,
With her back comb turned in anger on the Alto and the Bass;
While the Tenor stood beside her with an elevated nose,
And the Organist pawed madly at the pedals with his toes.

How could any one but Angels sing when they were feeling so?
Though the hymn was "Songs of Gladness," they would make it "Sounds of Woe."
When we sing about devotion, some devotion we must feel,
Or the plaintive tone of worship will partake somewhat of a squeal.

But the Alto sung her solo, then left it to the Bass,
Who was gnawing at his moustache, and was looking for the place:
While the Organist, in anger, sang the leading part alone,
And the Tenor tried to follow, but it ended in a groan.

As the horror-stricken people heard the discord rising higher,
It was patent to the simplest there was trouble in the choir,
And the Organist, in fury, closed the organ with a crash,
And the Alto sobbed in anguish and the choir had gone to smash.

When the Elder went among them with a view to reconcile,
The Soprano told the story with a sanguinary smile;
It appeared the wretched Chorister had introduced a girl
With a bran-new style of singing, and a most distracting curl.

But, to cap the bitter climax, this usurper wore a hat,
Just a duck, a gem, a beauty, and it made the rest look flat;
And the straw that broke the camel's back and made the wreck complete—
She came early Sunday morning and usurped the leading seat.

When the Elder asked the Tenor why he left, he said: "Because
The Soprano said his chest-tones sounded just like filing saws;
And he overheard the Alto one night whisper to the Bass,
That a man with such a moustache was a palpable disgrace."

And the Bass informed the Elder that he sacrificed his views
When he came and joined the Elder's choir, to help fill up the pews;
He was an Episcopalian, and if people thought he'd take Any nonsense from a Baptist, they had made a great mistake.

Then the Organist and Alto both put on an injured look,
Saying something in an undertone about a change of book;
And the Elder overheard them, as he gently closed the door;
Use the words: "A poor old fogy," and "A sentimental bore."

GOLD OR DROSS?

"And is everything lost? Is it possible that I am reduced to possible beggary. Nothing—nothing I can call my own?"

"Why, yes, sir; yes, Mr. Maxwell, nearly everything is gone. To be sure there is that five hundred a year, and that place in Vermont that you settled on your wife; you may save that out of the wreck. A trifle—a mere nothing, I am aware, out of such a noble inheritance as yours, Mr. Maxwell; but still it is something. Half a loaf you know, sir, is—"

He stopped suddenly at a motion of Roger Maxwell's hand. He was a lawyer and used to this sort of thing, and was not much affected by the story he had come out from New York to tell Mr. Maxwell; his rich client had speculated rashly, and had lost—a common case enough. A week ago he was worth half a million, to-night he was not worth a dollar—that was all. There were his wife's settlements, of course; but they were his wife's—and Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell were two.

"I thought I had better let you know at once, Mr. Maxwell," the lawyer said, it's sure to be in everybody's mouth to-morrow. And now, if I'm to catch that nine-fifty up-train, I had better be starting. Good-night, sir."

"Good-night, sir," Roger Maxwell said, mechanically.

He was leaning against the low iron gateway, his folded arms resting on its carved top, and the black shadows of the beeches shutting him in like a pall. Up the avenue lamps gleamed through the trees, turning the dark November night into a kind of fairyland. The wide front of the stately mansion was all aglow with illuminations, music, flowers and lovely women; and loveliest, where all was lovely, was its proud young mistress, Edith Maxwell.

"Two men, stragglers from the ball-room, with their cigars lighted, came down through the gloom, close to the motionless figure against the iron gate—only a shadow among the other shadows—so close that he heard every word they uttered.

"Rather superb style of things, all this," one said. "When Roger Maxwell does a thing of this sort he does it well. Wonderful luck he's had; five years ago he hadn't a red; and that wife of his—magnificent Edith—is the most beautiful creature the sun shines on."

"Too beautiful, my friend, for—she is ice!"

"Ah! to her husband? Married him for his money, didn't she? The old story, very poor, very proud, and sold to the highest bidder. Sefton stood to win her there once, didn't he?"

"It was a desperate flirtation—something more, the knowing ones say; but Sefton knew better than to indulge in a penniless wife. So Maxwell appeared, made rich suddenly and—she's Mrs. Maxwell to-night, and more queenly than ever. I watched her dancing with Sefton half an hour ago, and— Well, I didn't envy Maxwell, if he is worth half a million. Let's go back to the house; it's going to rain."

"Suppose Maxwell was to lose his fortune—what then?"

"My good fellow, he would lose his wife in the same hour. Some women there are who would go with their husbands into beggary—but not the lovely Edith; and he is a splendid fellow, too, is Maxwell. There, the rain begins!"

The shadow among the trees stood perfectly still. A long, low wind moved the trees, and the rain beat its melancholy drip, drip. Half an hour, an hour, two passed, but the figure leaning against the gate remained as still as the iron itself. But he stirred at last, became conscious he was wet through and passed slowly out of the gloom and up the lamplit avenue and into the stately home that, after to-night, would be his no longer. Another half hour and he was back in the glitter, dazzle and music of the brilliant drawing room, his wet garments were changed, himself whiter than marble, and almost as still. He had not been missed; his beautiful bride shone there in diamonds, silk and roses resplendent—and who was there to think of the rich Maxwell? "Only a clod," whom she had honored by marrying. The fascinating Gerald Sefton was by her side. How could she find time to think of anything so plebeian as mon mari while in his entrancing company?

But it was all over at last. The "lights were fled, the garland dead," and Mrs. Maxwell was in her drawing-room in the pale morning light, under the hands of her maid. She lay back among the rose-velvet cushions, languid and lovely, and looked around with an irritated flush at the entrance of the master of the house. He did not often intrude; since the first weeks of their marriage he had been a model husband and kept his place; therefore Mrs. Maxwell looked surprised as well as annoyed now.

"Do you wish to speak to me, Mr. Maxwell?" she asked, coldly; for after an evening with Gerald Sefton she was always less tolerant with her plebeian husband.

"Yes—but alone. I'll wait in your boudoir until you dismiss your maid."

Something in his colorless face—something in the sound of his voice startled her, but he departed while yet speaking, and the maid went on.

"Hurry, Cecil," her mistress said, briefly, and Cecil coiled up the shining hair, arranged the white dressing-gown, and left her. Edith Maxwell arose and went into the boudoir. It was the daintiest bijou of boudoirs, all rose silk, silver filigree-work and delicious Greuze paintings smiling down from the fluted panels. A bright wood fire burned on the marble hearth, and her husband stood leaning against the low chimney-piece, whiter and colder than the marble itself.

"Well," she said, what is it?"

He looked up. She stood before him in all her beauty and her pride, jewels flashed on her hands—a queen by right divine of her azure eyes and tinselled hair—his, yet not his; "so near and yet so far." He loved her, how well his own wrung heart only knew.

"What is it?" she repeated, impatiently. "I am tired and sleepy. Tell me in a word."

"I can—ruin!"

"What?"

"I am ruined! All is lost. I am a beggar!"

She started back, turning whiter than her dress, and leaned heavily against a chair.

"Ruined!" she repeated. "A beggar!"

"Ugly words, are they not, but quite true. I did not know it until last night. Walker came out from town to tell me. My last grand speculation has failed, and its failure engulfed everything; I am as poor as the poorest laborer on this place; poorer than I was five years ago, before this fortune was left me."

There was a sort of pleasure in thus putting things in their ugliest light. Rich or poor, she despised him alike. What need was there for him to mince matters?

"There are your settlements; your five hundred a year and the place in Vermont, that crumb of a loaf is left, and remains yours. I am sorry for you, Mrs. Maxwell—sorry that your sacrifice of youth and loveliness on the altar of mammon has been in vain. I had hoped, when I married you, of winning some return for the limitless love I gave you. I know to-day how futile that hope has been. Once again for your sake, I am sorry; for myself I do not care. The world is a wide place, and I may yet make my way. I give you your freedom, the only reparation for marrying you in my power to make. I leave here to-night, New York to-morrow, and so—farewell."

She stood like a stone; he turned and left her. Once she made a movement, seeing the white anguish of face, as though to go to him, but she did not. He was gone, and she dropped down in the rose and silver glitter of her fairy room, as miserable a woman as day ever dawned on.

A month later, and she was in the cottage up in Vermont. All had gone; the nine days wonder was at an end; the "rich Maxwell" and his handsome wife had disappeared, and society got on very well without them. They had been, and they were not, and the story was told. Of all who had broken bread with the ruined man there were not two who cared whether he were living or dead.

The December winds swept down through the Vermont valleys and lashed the windows of the cottage where Edith Maxwell lived. She sat in the long, low, gloomy parlor before a blazing wood fire, and Gerald Sefton stood before her. He had just found her out, and had run up to see how she bore her altered fortunes. She bore them as an uncrowned might, with regal pride. The exquisite face had lost its roseate bloom, the deep, still eyes looked larger and more fathomless, the proud mouth was set in patient pain—that was all.

The man felt his heart burn as he looked at her, she was so lovely. He leaned over, and the passionate words came that he could not check. He loved her; she loved him; she was forsaken and alone; why need they part? She listened, growing whiter than a corpse. Then she came and faced him until the coward soul within him quailed and shrank.

"I have fallen very low," she said; "I am poor, alone, and a deserted wife. But Gerald Sefton, I have not fallen low enough for that. Go!"

Her unwavering finger pointed to the door. There was that in her voice no man dare disobey, and he slunk forth like a whipped hound.

As on the night she had parted from her husband, she slipped down in her misery to the ground and hid her face in her hands. Now she knew the man she had loved: now she was learning to know the man who had loved her. The one would drag her down to the bottomless depths of blackness and infamy, the other had given up all for her—even herself—and gone forth a homeless, penniless wanderer, to fight the battle of life.

"Oh, truest and noblest," her heart cried, in passionate pain, "how cruelly I have wronged you! Bravest and best heart, that ever beat in man's breast, and I only to know your worth when it is too late?"

It seemed so. Roger Maxwell had disappeared out of the world—the world she knew—as utterly as though he had never been in it. The slow months dragged slowly by, but he never came. The piteous advertisements in the newspapers remained unanswered when the spring buds burst, and she was alone in her worse than widowhood in the cottage in Vermont still.

With the glory of the brilliant summer new hope dawned for her. A tiny messenger, with Roger Maxwell's great brown eyes, smiled up in her face, and baby's head nestled against her lonely heart. Ah! she knew how she loved baby's father when the brown eyes, of which these were the counterpart, were lost to her forever. So with the great world shut out, and with only baby Roger and her two servants, life went on in the solitary cottage.

Four years had gone by, and little Roger could toddle and lisp, and in Edith Maxwell's heart hope slowly died out. She had lost him through her own fault; he to whom she had been bound bythe mysterious tie of marriage would never look upon her cruel face again.

She sat one stomy November night thinking very sadly of the true heart and strong love she had cast away. Her boy lay asleep by the ruddy fire; the rain and wind beat wildly against the windows. She sat looking out with weary, vacant eyes, so lonely, so very lonely, her soul longing with unutterable yearning for the wanderer to come back. There was a knock at the door—a faltering, humble knock. Through the deepening gloom of the rainy twilight she saw a man leaning wearily against the door post—a man shabby and ill-clad, with drooping head and dejected air. Her housekeeper opened the door, and she could hear her harsh, high pitched voice.

"This isn't an inn—we don't shelter tramps. Go long with you! The village is only half a mile from here."

The house door slammed in his face. The man turned despairingly away, walked a few steps, reeled, and fell to the ground like a log. Edith Maxwell started to her feet, was out of the room and the house in a moment, out in the pouring rain beside the falling man, her two startled servants following.

"Lift him up and carry him to the kitchen," she ordered, imperiously. "Mary, I will never forgive you for doing such a cruel thing! James, make haste!" Her man servant raised the prostrate form, and with some difficulty bore him to the kitchen and laid him on a wooden bench. The light fell on his upturned face, haggard and death-like, and at the sight Edith Maxwell gave a cry that these who heard never forgot, and falling on her knees, rained passionate kisses on the white face.

"At last!" she sobbed convulsively. "Oh, Heaven, I thank thee!"

The servants gazed aghast. He looked up, and all her self-control returned.

"Take him to my room, James, and remove these wet clothes, then ride for your life for a doctor! He is my husband!"

Yes, at last. After all those weary years of waiting her husband restored to her like this. Restored, yet nearly lost. For many nights after that the watcher's lamp burned it Edith's chamber, and she sat by her sick husband's side, sick almost unto death.

Night and day found her there, pale and sleepless as a ministering spirit, listening to his wild, disconnected talk—her own name often upon his lips. How she cared for him, how she prayed for him only Heaven and herself knew. Her prayers prevailed. The heavy eyes opened one still midnight hour and rested on her face. They were no longer delirious, but knew her with a kindling light of doubt and joy.

"Edith," he said, faintly, "my wife!"

She was on her knees beside him, his weak head lying in her caressing arms.

"My darling—my darling, thank Heaven! My dear, my true husband, forgive your erring wife!"

His face beamed, with a beautiful smile; he drew her lovely head down and kissed it.

"It is true, then, what I heard, and which has brought me home; you have sought me? But if I am poor—poorer than when I went away?"

"Ah, do you thing I care now? I love you and we are rich. We will never part again, my husband; I cannot live without you."

"No never again, my love, my love; and I do not come to you poor. In the golden land, California, I have retrieved the past and returned to you a rich man."

Her face grew pale in an instant.

"I am sorry! I wanted to atone; how can I now? I have been your wife in the sunshine; I wanted to be yours in the shadow. I can never show you how I have repented now."

Her tears pleaded for her more powerfully than words. He sealed the pleading lips with kisses.

"My beautiful Edith!" he said; "my wife at last! Mine forever, forever!"

THE WORLD'S LARGEST CITIES.

The following information is often inquired for, and, as it may be useful in many cases for reference, we have compiled a table of the largest cities of the world, with their populations as stated by the latest authorities. In the absence of any official census, the Chinese cities have simply to be estimated, and of course, must be accepted as approximation only. We have not given any city whose population is less than 500,000, though there are many we could enumerate which closely approach that figure. It will be seen that in the thirty-five cities tabulated below, there are 32,510,219 souls, or nearly the population of the British Isles, a fact which cannot be grasped in a moment by any ordinary intellect.

WHEN HAME YE MADE!

Where, oh where has the young man gone who graduation clothes put on, some time about the last of May, and owned the whole wide world for a day? And where is the sweet girl graduate, who chanted an essay dread with fate, and started out with a giggling frown to turn this old world upside down? And where is last year's candidate who had things fixed for this year's slate? Who carried around, as you'd believe a couple of counties in his sleeve? And where is the scribe with a vaulting will who tried a long felt want to fill, and courted shekels and renown with a minion paper in a bourgeoise town? The lad has divided the world up fair, and holds his own eighth billionth share; the sweet girl grad. is a grand surprise and conquers the world with well-made pies; the candidate with a deathless gall is fixing himself for another fall; while the journalist with a haughty crest has gone the way of last year's nest. So year by year and day by day the world runs on in the same old way; the balloon that is biggest round about is the flabbiest rag when the gas is out.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

SINGULAR CHINESE SENTENCE.—A Chinese merchant, accused and convicted of having killed his wife, was sentenced to die by the total deprivation of sleep. The condemned was placed in prison under the surveillance of three guardians, who relieved each other every alternate hour, and who prevented him from taking sleep night or day. He lived thus for nineteen days without having slept for a single minute. Before he died his sufferings were terrible.

"Well, John," said a New York judge to a pig-tailed Celestial, "what can I do for you?"

"Want to gettee name changed."

"What's your name now?"

"Sing Sing. No goodee. Too much aldelman. Gettee changed to "Walbee Twice."

"To Warble Twice?"

"Yep. Allee same Sing Sing."

"Have you 'White Wings?'" asked a lady of the new clerk in a music store.

"No," was the blushing response; "but I hope to have a nice long pair, if I'm a good boy down here."

Considering the price of fashionable bonnets, we begin to think the word "millionaire" is but a corruption of milliner.—Life.

He who does a base thing in zeal for his friend, burns the golden thread that ties their hearts together.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 25, 1887.

MAYOR MAYNARD will surely be the winning man in the municipal contest in Springfield next month unless the Republicans put forward their best man and stick to him like beavers.

As the time approaches for the re-assembling of the state Legislature, attention is drawn to the make-up of the two branches, and the business which seems destined to receive the largest share of consideration. That which is most frequently discussed is the division of towns, and of this an unusually large grist is evidently waiting to be ground. If this business continues to increase the friends of biennial sessions may reasonably despair, unless a commission is speedily appointed, with at least advisory powers, to hear the parties in interest and report the facts, and thus relieve the general court of duties, the performance of which have already brought so much discredit upon the state.

THE movement to secure reform in the Boston city government is making commendable headway, and there is good reason to expect that the objects sought will be in a great measure accomplished. The best people of the city, irrespective of party, have taken hold of the matter in dead earnest, and there is a substantial agreement to put into the field as a candidate for mayor the very strongest man whom it is possible to select. The prominent names already mentioned include that of ex-Gov. Gaston, and it is thought that he will be the coming man if he can be induced to accept the nomination. It is high time that a little of the virtue and integrity which is yet supposed to predominate in the old commonwealth should be introduced into the local government of her chief commercial city.

IT is one of the sad misfortunes of the French people that their ship of state is destined never to sail in smooth waters. Considering their fiery temper and the spirit of unrest which has never ceased to control them, it is surprising that a form of government so liberal as the present should prove sufficient to keep them in subjection for so many years. Among the political leaders in France there is clearly no lack of genuine statesmanship. Then, too, the sentiment of the masses is strongly favorable to some form of self-government. A combination of these elements may result in a degree of stability which is entirely adequate to withstand a storm of more than ordinary severity. At present however a crisis in France appears to be imminent. Hot blood is up, and the bitterness of rival factions is producing rapid changes in the highest council of the nation. It is her good fortune that in a time like this she has a strong and courageous man at the helm.

WE are again in the midst of the autumn holidays—the season of friendly greetings and family reunions, of memories that make light our hearts or fill them with bitterness and grief according to the experiences which the passing year has brought to us. Those of us who have enjoyed the sunshine of life unobscured by recent affliction find this a special time for rejoicing that the mercies of God have been bestowed upon us with so much bounty. Others there are, to whom the saddest bereavements have but lately come, whose hearts bleed afresh as the occasion recalls to their minds the forms of those faces they have been called to look upon for the last time. We know not what God has in store for any of us in the future. That he will continue to afflict we have reason to know from what has fallen to our lot in the past. That he will also continue to bless to the full extent of our deserts we have none of us any occasion to doubt. For all his blessings, that gratitude which is so justly his due we are none of us entitled to withhold.

COL. GLEEN, of driven-well fame, has at last come to grief, the highest court, after a full hearing, having refused to sustain the validity of his patent. For nearly seventeen years, under the protection of the government, he has enjoyed the profits of his pretended invention, when it is discovered for the first time that his claim to originalty has not a single fact upon which to rest. This is only one of the numerous cases that are constantly arising which would seem to demonstrate the necessity of a thorough revision of our patent laws. There may have been a time generations ago when every trivial invention which had the merit of novelty should be protected against infringments for the period of seventeen years, and everybody who had occasion to use it should pay tribute to the inventor as a kind of reward for the blessing conferred by his labor and skill. The world moved very slowly in those days. Useful inventions came at rare intervals, and with the limited demands for the most of them the returns of course were comparitively small. But within less than a score of years a radical change has taken place. Marking time by the world's progress five years now equal twenty at least when our great-grandfathers were struggling with the rude inventions of their time. Now that science and skill have made such great advancement nothing but improvements of the highest utility should be regarded as deserving of the goverment's protection. The most important inventions are now crowding so rapidly upon each other that in the multiplicity of claims it is scarcely possible to determine to what extent the same principals are involved. Those too which are identical in their natures are often disclosed at so nearly the same point of time that it becomes extremely difficult to decide which of two or more inventions is entitled to priority, and thus to that exclusive protection which the law is intended to afford. In view of these facts it seems like sheer stupidity for the American people to allow any man, under laws of their own making, to filch from them wealth almost beyond conception, themselves becoming the willing victims of his extortions for seventeen years for the simple reason that his invention was perfected a few days or weeks before that of perhaps a dozen others who otherwise deserve to rank as high as he among the benefactors of mankind.

The Christian Endeavor Society will give an entertainment at the Congregational church next Tuesday evening, consisting of music, tableaux, a farce, and followed by a social time.

A man too drunk to know what he was about was taken to a field at the head of Walnut street last Saturday, his pockets "fished," and he was then left on the ground to recover as best he might.

There is a prospect that Palmer will soon be without any place in which to hold entertainments, as it is understood Mr. Leach contemplates tearing down the rink and building a dwelling house on the land occupied by it.

Only one change of time at this station was made by the Boston & Albany road Sunday, the 7.41 train from the west being held until 8.35, but they now announce that after to-morrow the 8.24 p. m. New York express will not stop at Palmer only Sundays.

The hook and ladder boys had a good attendance at their ball last evening. Excellent music was furnished by the Palmer Orchestra, and Charles Stuart of Springfield was prompter. All enjoyed a good time, and the boys will add about $35 to their treasury.

The high school reception at the Congregational church Tuesday evening was attended by a large number, and much enjoyed by all. There was instrumental music and a farce, "A thorn among the roses," after which coffee and cake were served to all, and a social time followed.

The Wales stage line changes time next Thursday, when it will leave Wales at 7 in the morning, reaching Palmer in season to connect with the 9.43 train east, and returning will leave Palmer at 4.34 p. m., except Mondays, when it will leave Wales at 5.30 a.m., and will wait at Palmer Saturdays until 5.30 p. m.

Thomas Dwyer, formerly express messenger on the Ware Railroad, and Marcus Sullivan, a weaver at the carpet mill, have bought the grocery business of the Joseph Thompson estate, and the new firm will be known as Dwyer and Sullivan. They are both enterprising young men, and deserve success.

A change of time goes into effect on the New London Northern road next Monday, when the train wich now leaves for the south at 7.42 p. m. will leave at 7.10, and the one now leaving for the north at 6.10 will leave at 5.30. Sunday train from the south will arrive at 5 15, about 10 minutes earlier than now.

The Springfield Sunday Republican heard that Lawyer Taft of this place was soon to open an office in Boston, "with a view to handling some of the fat cases that annually come before the Legislature". Mr. Taft says that while at some future time circumstances may cause him to open an office at the Hub, he has no intention of doing so at present.

The 5.30 express train from Worcester was about 20 minutes late Wednesday evening, leaving Worcester on the accommodation train's time. Quite a number of passengers thought it was the latter train, and were obliged to come through to Palmer and take the 8.35 train back to West Brookfield, making their way to other intermediate stations as best they could.

Judge Brown of Brimfield presided at the district court last Saturday. Daniel McGrath of West Warren was bound over in the sum of $700 for burglary, secured bail and was released. For an felonious assault on H. C. Strng, Willie Thatcher, in default of fine and cost, was committed. In the case of Connell of Monson, for illegal liquor keeping, the liquors were forfeited to the commonwealth.

For a long time Palmer people have desired a train leaving Springfield between six and seven o'clock p. m., and they have been seconded by residents of Monson and Stafford, who in order to be sure of making connections at Palmer have been obliged to leave Springfield at 4 in the afternoon and wait here three hours and a quarter before their train left. This week a petition for a train leaving Springfield at the hour mentioned has been circulated, and has received numerous signatures.

Frank Little, an accomplice of Daniel McGrath and Walter Crane in the assault on the Brown brothers, was arrested at his home on "Hog Hill" Tuesday by Sheriff Healy. He claimed that he had come home to give himself up, and made a confession of his part in the affair. Bail was placed at $1000, and his case will come up to-morrow. The officers think that if he tells all he knows the mystery concerning many of the burglaries committed in this vicinity recently will be cleared up. Crane's whereabouts are known, and the officers expect to have him in a short time.

Thanksgiving day passed off quietly, as usual. The mills and banks were closed all day, and the stores closed at noon. Very little drunkenness was seen through the day. An unusually large number of Palmer people spent the day with out of town friends, but still the market-men report a fair sale of poultry. The children at the state primary school were served with the usual Thanksgiving dinner, in addition to which Miss Curtis Black of Ashland sent a large quantity of choice flowers to be distributed, and in the evening they were given an entertainment, Miss Marion Sterns of Springfield reading.

Palmer people who wish to attend the second Thomas concert at Springfield next Monday evening are assured a special train out after the entertainment, and it will doubtless be well patronized. A good number of tickets have already been sold at this place, and there will doubtless be more before next Monday. There are good seats left yet, and orders may be left at this office any time before next Monday noon. Following is the programme to be rendered:

The "spook" which it was claimed was hovering about South Main street, has not been seen lately, and various theories are advanced regarding it. There are a few who firmly believe it to be of supernatural origin, while others believe it to be pure deviltry on the part of some one who ought to know better. The claim is also made that the sensation was gotten up to make capital for the daily paper reporters at so much per line. The majority of people believe, however, that the accosting of the young lady and the demand of money from her was done by some drunken person, and the balance of the business has no substance except in the minds of a few timid ones who imagine every shadow they see to be a "spook". One was seen on Thorndike street Monday evening, but on examination proved to be a small tree in the corner of the yard, and other sights of his "spookship" have turned out to be of much the same character. One fellow who was out in female attire, hoping the "spook" would accost him, came near being badly hurt by a man who thought he was trying to frighten someone.

PALMER BOYS IN BLUE.

A HANDSOME TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF ONE OF THEM.

L. L. Merrick Post No. 107, G. A. R., was the recipient of a handsome present Tuesday evening from the surviving members of Co., E., 36th Mass. Vols., in the shape of a handsome picture of Sergt. L. L. Merrick, for whom the post was named. Comrades from Springfield, Monson and Warren were present, also the Woman's Relief Corps. After singing by a quartette under the direction of W. F. Miller, Col. S. C. Warriner of Springfield presented the picture with the following remarks:

Mr. Commander:—I know of no event that can stir the remaining life blood of the surviving volunteer soldiers like the recollections of 1861 to '65, and no thought that can warm his heart with tenderer emotion than the memory of having seen his comrades fall in battle. It was that these sacred memories and the achievements of loyal men during the war of the rebellion should never be set at nought, blotted out or misapplied by the invincible tread and influence of subsequent events, and that this terrible sacrifice of human life may never be misunderstood by succeeding generations, that created the Grand Army of the Republic, and is the invisible tie that binds it together with bonds stronger than friendship and more enduring than the creed of any organization ever formed. Without the Grand Army the identity of the masses who constituted the Union Army would be swallowed up and lost among the sixty million of people now in the United States. The tramp of progress is irresistible and resolute, and ambitious minds never look toward the setting sun for emolument or for fame. It clearly was a wise and far seeing mind that sought to preserve the individual identity of the past and keep together the survivors of that army whose united sacrifice perpetuated our American Union. In the organization of Grand Army Posts it is provided and eminently fitting that the names of fallen comrades may be adopted by which the different Posts may be known.

When Post 107 was formed and adopted the name of L. L. Merrick, I am prepared to say that his surviving comrades credit its members with having made a selection eminently fitting the honor they bestow. L. L. Merrick enlisted from Palmer in '62 and served in Co. E., 36th Regiment Mass. Vols. until his death from wounds received in battle. I do no one injustice when I say that among his comrades he stood equal with the best in the esteem of all who knew him, and that his services were distinguished for their patriotic fervor, undoubted courage and invincible fidelity to the cause he loved. This tribute to his memory is not for this occasion alone, but is the testimony of his comrades in arms who camped, marched and fought with him on many a field, and who cherish his memory with the warmest affection. It is this feeling of kindly remembrance that brings us here to give visible evidence of our appreciation of his services to his country, and to place before you a token of our fidelity to his memory and a tribute to a life sealed forever in uncompromising devotion in defense of our National Union. Let this token remind you of the dark days when the life of the nation was in danger, when labor and learning toiled to preserve it but toiled in vain, when our statesmen could not control its destinies, when the influence of friendship, the ties of kindred and the eloquence of our greatest orators failed to stem the tide of threatened dissolution. Let it remind you that the loyal people of this country, men an women alld, believed no sacrifice too great to save the country, no obstacle to powerful to overcome, and no combination of treason but must be crushed to the earth. Let it remind you that it was at this time that the inherited valor and patriotism of loyal sires, and the natural born instinct for freedom to all and its benificence burst forth, and fathers, sons and brothers vied with each other in heroism, noble deeds and fearful sacrifices in defense of home, friends and country. Let it remind you that the past was made glorious by their achievements, and that the present is made glorious through the fidelity with which those who remain hold fast to the belief that those who have died for the country have not died in vain. And now, Mr. Commander, in behalf of the surviving comrades of Sergt. L. L. Merrick, I present to you and through you to Post 107, his portrait, and ask that it may be received in the fraternal spirit in which it is given, and that it may have an appropriate place in your assembly hall, then to remain a visible witness that loyalty and life should be inseparable, except by the hand of death, and that to die for one's country is to live for ever in the hearts of the people.

Commander Upham accepted the picture in behalf of the post. Comrades Perry of Springfield, Gage of Warren, Henry and Holbrook of Palmer followed, all testifying to the high esteem in which Sergt. Merrick was held by his comrades, and having nothing but the highest words of praise for him as an enthusiastic, conscientious soldier. He was born on a farm on the edge of the Dumplin mountain, received an education in the common schools of the town, Monson academy and Amherst College, and was ordained a Baptist minister. He was twice wounded and sent to the hospital, returning to his regiment each time as soon as he was able. On the 19th of October, 1864, the next day after his second return from the hospital he was wounded the third time and was taken prisoner, dying in about ten days from the effects of his injuries. Remarks were also made by Comrades Davis of Monson and Hogan of Three Rivers, and Mrs. E. L. Davis of the Woman's Relief Corps. Mrs. W. G. Hitchcock read a poem and Mrs. Coleman recited an original poem. After the exercises in the hall the company adjourned to the Converse House, where an excellent supper had been provided by Landlord Stone, after which army songs were sung by the entire company. The picture is an elegant colored one about 30 by 50 inches, executed by Lazelle of Springfield, and was presented by the surviving comrades of L. L. Merrick, who are scattered all over the country, the task of getting the subscriptions together and seeing to the work being intrusted to Comrade Perry of Springfield.

Club swinging, character songs and the ever popular Punch and Judy were introduced. A fairly good number was in attendance.

Saturday was the 50th birthday of George M. Hitchcock, and the 25th anniversary of his marriage to Delia A. Parker, and the event was celebrated by a surprise party of their friends, who called in the evening with a number of presents. Mr. Hitchcock has had charge of the music in the Second Congregational church since its organization, and a purse of $44 was presented him in recognition of his services. He is of the sixth generation in descent from Lieut. Nathaniel Whitcomb, one of the first settlers of the town.

WEST WARREN.

Union Thanksgiving services were held in the Congregational church yesterday forenoon.

The union revival meetings are being held this week as usual, excepting there was no meeting last night.

The outside students of the academy celebrated the closing of the fall term by a banquet at the Allis House last Saturday evening.

The village will be well represented at the Thomas concert in Springfield next Monday night. Ten tickets have already been sold here.

Eugene M. Johnson, dyer for the Warren Cotton Mills, was married to Miss Freadonia Palmer Wednesday evening. The happy couple took an early start on their wedding trip midst a shower of rice. They will visit friends in Maine, Mr. Johnson's native state, and upon their return will commence housekeeping in the Rycroft house.

THREE RIVERS.

Don't ask Alex or Charlie about the "spook."

Miss Hattie Kendrick, of Springfield, spent Thanksgiving with friends in this village.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Newton and Miss M. Kendrick of Worcester were the guests of L. B. Kendrick this week.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Derby had a very pleasant gathering of friends and relatives at their home Thanksgiving day. Among the guests present were J. R. Derby and wife and F. W. Derby of Orange, Miss Clark of South Royalton, Fred Adams and family and Mrs. E. H. Fales and son, W. H. Beeman, of Athol.

John Lester had a hard time of it last Friday night. While returning from Chicopee he accidentally drove into the ditch beside the road, smashing his wagon somewhat. There he was found by Officer Bowen, and as he had a key of beer in the wagon it was promptly confiscated, and John will be called upon to explain how it came there.

Milton G. Starrett, assistant professor of mathematics at Tuft's College, is a guest of Dr. J. P. Rand.

Rev. Dr. Gould will preach at the Congregational church next Sunday. Rev. Mr. Hatch will be ordained next Wednesday.

The Rock Band Concert Co. will give one of their pleasing entertainments at Memorial Hall next Monday night for the benefit of the Grand Army.

Miss Gould of Providence will form dancing classes in this village next Wednesday, an afternoon class from 3 to 5, and an evening class from 8 to 10.

An extra train will be run from Palmer next Monday evening at 11 o'clock, to accommodate those who wish to attend the Thomas concert at Springfield.

Hotel de Newton is receiving a large amount of patronage from winter tourists. No less than seven brawney "Knights of Rest" spent Saturday night there.

The coffee party given by St. Patrick's society last evening was a great success, genial Father Lee exerting himself to make the occasion an enjoyable one for all.

The Young Men's Social Club will present an entertainment at Central Hall on the evening of December 6th, having engaged the De Seve-Hood Concert Company.

The stone-cutter's ball in Central hall last Friday evening netted the society about $25. The music by the Boston Cadet Band was excellent, and about 125 couples participated.

F. E. Howe is out with a new meat cart.

Alanson Chaffee has sold the lot south of his house to St. Patrick's Catholic society, which will build a parochial residence thereon.

Monson has a real live "spook." One that demands cash, too. Certain localities will not be at all healthy for him, and if he is wise he will suspend operations altogether.

Mrs. Olive Bell of North Wilbraham, who has been sick with consumption for some time, died Wednesday evening at the residence of her mother, Mrs. Otis Needham. The funeral will be to-morrow at 1 p. m.

Sunday morning it was reported that the men who came from Stafford for the morning papers found in the cemetery just north of Central Block a man who was anxiously awaiting the resurrection, which in his case meant liberation from the gravestone to which he was tied hand and foot, unable to stir, having been placed there the night before by his companions while drunk. A careful investigation however fails to show that anything of the kind took place.

Joseph B. Baker, who was accidentally shot in the face while out hunting recently, left Wednesday for the home of his wife's father in Pascoag, R. I., where he is to be treated by a Boston oculist, and hopes to recover his eyesight. He was a foreman for R. M. & T. Reynolds, a superior workman, a man of steady habits, and had won the esteem and friendship of all with whom he became acquainted. He is only 26 years of age, and his many friends heartily wish he may recover from his affliction.

About noon last Friday fire was discovered in the tenement house back of Howe's market, "up street." The smoke was so thick that it was impossible to get near the flames, which were inside a partition, but a stream from the chemical engine, which was quickly brought from Flynt's block, soon extinguished them. This was the first time the apparatus was called into use, and it more than saved its cost, as the fire was in a thickly built up portion, and would have got beyond control but for its aid.

A few days ago, as James Buchanan, a well known resident of Moulton Hill, was driving villageward, his fiery steed gave a sudden leap, precipitating a part of the contents of his loaded wagon upon the ground. Half a barrel of floor mingled its snowy particles with some twenty balls of butter, fragments of a broken jar and—dirt. For a few moments James contemplated the mass in dire dismay, but soon recovered himself, and gathering up his butter proceeded on his way as if nothing had happened.

The patrol wagon was called out for its first trip last Saturday night, and worked to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. Two men were found at a late hour in the evening on Main street, the deadest kind of "dead drunk." One lay in a ditch of water opposite Central Block, and the other one near Dr. Rand's office. A wheelbarrow was procured, and with one man to propel it, one on each side to hold the passenger on, and a fourth to carry the lantern, they were taken to the lockup one at a time. Monday morning they were brought before the court at Palmer, paid fine and costs, and both got "full" again before reaching home at night.

A new time table goes into effect on the New London Northern road next Monday, on and after which date the boat train south at night will leave Palmer at 7.10, instead of 7.42 as at present. Monson ladies who do their shopping in Springfield will be obliged to leave there at 4 p. m. in order to get home the samen ight, as the next train does not leave the city until 8.10, and the local merchants hope this will cause them to do more of their trading at home. The train which now leaves Monson for Palmer at 5.14 p. m. will leave at 5, and the boat train will reach here from Palmer at 7.20, instead of 7.50. The mails which now close at 5 and 7.35 p. m. will then close at 4.45 and 7.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The water commissioners have put in 305 service pipes, and will not put in any more this winter except in special cases.

Invitations are out for the marriage of Ossian N. Moore and Miss Florence L. Sagendorph, to take place next Thursday evening.

C. D. Henry's People's Theater, which is the best of the low priced companies on the road, will be at Music Hall for a week, commencing Dec. 5.

The second annual ball of the Knights of Labor last week Friday evening was a fizzle financially, the receipts being but half enough to cover expenses.

R. C. Snow and daughter Alberta are to said for Paris to-morrow, accompanied by Mrs. A. M. Morin, who has been visiting here some weeks. Mr. Snow has a brother who has resided in Paris for some years.

About 50 of the friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ward gave them a surprise party at their home Tuesday evening, it being the fifth aniversary of their wedding. A very enjoyable evening was spent. The happy couple was presented with a large marble top center table and a parlor lamp, the presentation being made by Rev. E. Hitchcock, and responded to by Mr. and Mrs. Ward in a few well timed remarks. Refreshments were served during the evening.

It is greatly feared that the scarlet fever has got a hold here that will be hard to overcome. Xaver Tatro, on Aspen street, foot of Vigeant, has had two children die with the worst form of the fever within a week. The first was reported as dying with sore throat, and was buried with a public funeral. Members of the family have worked in the mills, and it seems almost impossible but that the disease must spread. The second child was buried on Wednesday night after 10 o'clock by William Medcalf, of the board of health, and the family have been ordered not to go out for two weeks. Disinfectants have been freely used on the bedding and in the house, hoping to prevent further spread of the disease.

Tuesday evening the selectmen contracted with the Ware Electric Light Co. for fifteen 1200-candle-power arc lights, to be in operation Feb. 1, 1888, at a cost of $100 per light per annum for 14 lamps—one being furnished free for the franchise—to be run from dark to 12 o'clock at least 24 nights each month. It is reported that the station is to be near the gun shop. The lights are to be located as follows, in nearly all cases to be suspended over the streets so as to light both sides equally well: Corner Church and Main streets, Bank and Main, West and Main, North and Pleasant, Church and Pleasant, Bank and High, Main street and Knox avenue, Maple and Chestnut streets, Maple and South, Monroe and South, Park street near Main, at the angle on Water street, West street near St. William's church, West Main street near Horace Bond's.

The town was startled on Wednesday morning by the announcement that the depot had been entered by professional burglars, but everybody was pleased to learn that they had their labor for their pains, not having secured enough booty to pay for the tools left on the premises. The burglars gained entrance by prying open the door of the ladies' room, and then the door of the office. A small hole was drilled through the top of the safe in which an explosive was placed and fired by fuse, the explosion throwing the door entirely from the safe and partially wrecking the office and scattering confusion in all directions. But little damage was done beside destroying the safe. There were no tickets, stamps or papers taken, and but a few cents in money, as the receipts for the day are not left in the safe over night. There is no clue to the burglars, but they are supposed to be experts from the city.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

Boston is in the midst of its annual struggle for good government. Those who are opposed to the present Democratic rule are planning in what way they can depose the mayor and put a better board of aldermen and common council in the city hall. The prospect, to my mind, is not encouraging, for the same thing has been gone over before when there was a better outlook for success, and even then the Democratic party has carried the city by a good majority. The fight this year is for the respectability of Boston, for that seems to be the element most aggrieved by the course of the mayor during the past year. Respectable Boston cannot forget that the mayor of this historic and dignified city was present at the testimonial to John L. Sullivan and represented the penditure of $17,000 to entertain the queen of the Hawaiian kingdom will be one of the issues of the campaign, but most of the taxes are paid by the Republicans, so why should the Democrats care? Certainly the "boys" about the city hall have very light public duties in the way of tax-paying, and they are those who elect the mayor and city government. There is one thing, however; the new charter of Boston puts far more responsibility upon the mayor than was put upon him by the old charter, and if things do not go right they know that the mayor is the responsible man whom to call to account. This question of city government is still one of the greatest problems of our day, and the dwellers in towns have some things to be thankful for in their form of government which they do not half appreciate.

The meeting of the temperance people last Saturday was entirely successful in point of attendance and in interest in the no-license vote in the coming city elections. Permanent headquarters for the city campaign—meaning the campaign in all the cities—have been opened in the Massachusetts Total Abstinence society of which Gov. Ames is president. The temperance people will work in every city and will do their best to increase their vote over last year, when 13 of the 23 cities voted no license and the total vote against license in all the cities was 10,000 more than the vote for license. This was a great gain for the temperance folks, and they hope to avoid the swing of the pendulum the other way, which comes about once in so often, and keep the temperance ball moving forward all the time. They have the help of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and from the good work done by the women last year they hope to find them equally efficient this year. Some of the leaders of the Republican party were present at Saturday's meeting, and they will do all they can to help on the temperance cause. They are interested in these city campaigns as they are interested in the temperance work at the state house and they are pushing the liquor dealers all along the line. It will be noticed that in some parts of the country the tendency of the times seems to be toward a system of high license combined with local option as the most effective way of stopping the sale of liquor. In those localities the cause of prohibition in the form which is familiar to us does not seem to have made much progress lately, but rather to have given way to this other form of restriction, which appears for the time to have the merit of being more effective.

The talk which has been made in some circles that President Boardman of the state Senate is to be opposed because he is a license man, and that a majority of the Republican senators will unite upon some other candidate, is all nonsense. No one who has much acquaintance with the Senate would propose the thing, and certainly he would not have mentioned Senator Hartwell of Fitchburg as the rival candidate to Mr. Boardman. The two men are on the best of terms and have long had familiar relations. Then, too, President Boardman put Senator Hartwell at the head of the judiciary committee last year, and no man, with any sense of political good faith, would run against another under such circumstances. Besdes, President Boardman has had but one term and has been rejected without material opposition. According to our common political usage he should have another term, and I have no idea that the scheme against him will be found to have any bottom to it. Senator Hartwell knew nothing of the mention of his name.

The legislative committee on the child labor of the state has held to-day the first of its meetings after the conclusion of its public hearings, but it has not agreed upon a report and, whatever conclusion it may reach, it will not be made public before the opening of the Legislature. But they hope to have a report ready about as soon as the Legislature meets. It has been a very hard and difficult subject to handle, and the results of the investigation have not been very satisfactory.

In the window of the Old Corner Bookstore on Washington street is a large picture of Jenny Lind. It is an old daguerreotype, photographed and enlarged. The work is done, I suppose as well as possible, but the result is not a very good picture in photographic sense. But the representation of the great singer is very distinct. The face is not at all that of a strong person, but there is much sweetness in the half smile which partly opens the lips. She would be called very plain, and the presence of the living soul would be needed to make her countenance remarkable. The picture was taken about the time when she first came to this country.

This is the last week of the Mechanics' fair. The attendance has been large and the display fine. The doors will be open until Saturday night, and for this week the admission of all children under sixteen years has been reduced to 15 cents. Every evening the great building is lighted up so that it is quite a feature in the landscape for a long distance around.

The theaters are doing a good business now, and the attractions are of all grades of merit. The author of the play which is now running at the Hollis Street theater is Mr. John J. McNally, a Boston newspaper man, now the dramatic critic of the Herald. He told me this week that his play had done the biggest week's business which had ever been done at the Hollis Street. The receipts for the past week were $9000. That is making money faster than by working on a newspaper, though I do not know what his share was.

The state house has been rejuvenated during the summer, and now Doric Hall rejoices in marble pillars of many hues. The visitor must not inspect the marble too closely, for he might suspect that the imitation had not been well made, but at a little distance the illusion is perfect.

LANDON.

I give honor to whom it is due. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy cured me of Bright's disease and gravel. I have been a great sufferer from catarrh for over ten years; had it very bad, could hardly breathe. Some nights I could not sleep—had to walk the floor. I purchased Ely's Cream Balm and am using it freely, it is working a cure surely. I have advised several friends to use it, and with happy results in every case. It is the one medicine above all others made to cure catarrh, and is worth its weight in gold. I thank God that I have found a remedy I can use with safety and that does all that is claimed for it. It is curing my deafness.—B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn. 2w34

A STRANGE FREAK.

The wife of our esteemed citizen, Mr. John Rowell, while suffering under a severe attack of the blues, tried to commit the crime of infanticide, but was prevented by the opportune arrival of a neighbor. Her case has been considered by the best doctors incurable, but her husband was highly pleased, after using a course of Sulphur Bitters, to find that she was entirely cured.—Kingston Herald. 2w35

UGLY AND HATEFUL,

but I couldn't help it. Everything went wrong with me, and I thought I hadn't a friend in the world; dyspepsia caused this, and for months I couldn't eat anything, and just suffered in misery till I used Sulphur Bitters. Three bottles cured me. –D. Lewis, 22 Bowdoin Street, Boston, Mass. 2w33

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

Some Things Learned by Experience.

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1 00 per bottle. eow7

THE VERDICT UNANIMOUS.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 2

A WOMAN'S DISCOVERY.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made, and that too by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly, and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hamrich & Co., of Shelby, N. C.—Get a free trial bottle at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 2

GIVE THEM A CHANCE!

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend on this for certain. 1y46eow

The TRIBUNE for 1888.

GREATLY ENLARGED.

MUCH THE BIGGEST OF ALL THE NEW YORK WEEKLIES.

Greater Variety of Contents, New Presses, New Type and New Appliances.

AT THE HEAD OF THE REPUBLICAN PRESS.

The New York Weekly Tribune will be enlarged on or before the 1st of January, 1888, by the addition of from four to eight more pages of actual reading matter—an increase of size at great expense to the Tribune, but without expense to the subscriber.

A complete outfit of the new folding and inserting presses will be put into the Tribune press room in November or December; and the extra sheet will be folded into its place in the main sheet before it comes from the press. The enlarged Tribune will be the biggest and best of all the New York weeklies, and the new machinery will print it, in the enlarged form, at the rate seventy-two thousand copies per hour.

New features and a greater variety of contents will be added to the Tribune during the coming year. Readers will be given nearly a half more for their money than ever before.

Pensions for the old volunteers, especially service pensions, are being vigorously agitated in the Tribune; much space is given in every issue to this subject. Better protection to the farmers under the tariff; the salvation of the country from the terrible curse of intemperance; and the rescue of the country from the hands of the rebel brigadiers; these, and all other live issues of the day are receiving aggressive, earnest and loyal treatment in the Tribune.

The Tribune does not attempt to supercede the local, state and county press. But, in the great presidential conflict now at hand, every thinking Republican, old soldier, farmer and temperance man, should have his local paper and the New York Tribune.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES—Weekly, $1 a year; extra copy with every five. Semi-Weekly, $2 a year; extra copy with every five. Daily, $8.50 a year. Sunday Tribune, $1.50. New subscribers receive the paper until January 1st, 1889. Remit always by draft, check, express or postal money order or registered letter.

PREMIUMS—(1.) The New York Tribune's History of the United States and Pocket Atlas of the world, 16mo., 254 pages, 50 maps, 50 colored diagrams; price 40 cents, to subscribers, 20 cents; prettiest premium of the year—a fascinating running account of the history of the country, with a great variety of statistics and general information. (2.) Presidential Pocket Knife; subscribers' name and picture of his choice for president on the handle; send for descriptive circular; price at retail, $1.75; but given with the Weekly Tribune one year for the same money, $1.75; two other styles for less money. (3.) Popular Picture Gallery—6 fine large pictures, including the new officers of the U. A. R., Mr. Blaine, Senators Evarts and Hiscox, "Return of the Mayflower," "Christ before Pilate," and "Children writing to Santa Claus;" send for circular. 4. Waltham Watch; expansion balance movement, stem winder, stem set, seven jewels, nickel case, thoroughly reliable, and an excellent watch; with the Weekly Tribune, 1 year, for $7.50. (5.) Tribune's "Book of Open Air Sports." (6.) Webster's "Unabridged Dictionary." (7.) Wood's "Household Medicine." The premiums cannot be described in full here. Send for circular.

The Tribune, NEW YORK.

ST. NICHOLAS.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

Since its first issue, in 1873, this magazine has maintained, with undisputed recognition, the position it took at the beginning,—that of being the most excellent juvenile periodical ever printed. The best known names in literature were on its list of contributors from the start,—Bryant, Longfellow, Thomas Hughes, George MacDonald, Bret Harte, Bayard Taylor, Frances Hodgson Burnett, James T. Fields, John G. Whittier; indeed the list is so long that it would be easier to tell the few authors of note who have not contributed to "the world's child magazine."

THE EDITOR, MARY MAPES DODGE,

author of "Hans Brinker; or, The Silver Skates," and other popular books for young folks,—and for grown-up folks,—too, has a remarkable faculty for knowing and entertaining children. Under her skillful leadership, ST. NICHOLAS brings to thousands of homes on both sides of the water knowledge and delight.

ST. NICHOLAS IN ENGLAND.

It is not alone in America that ST. NICHOLAS has made its great success. The London Times says: "It is above anything we produce in the same line." The Scotsman says: "There is no magazine that can successfully compete with it."

THE COMING YEAR OF ST. NICHOLAS.

The fifteenth year begins with the number for November, 1887, and the publishers can announce; Serial and Short Stories by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, Frank R. Stockton H. H. Boyesen, Joel Chandler Harris, J. T. Trowbridge, Col. Richard M. Johnston, Louisa M. Alcott, Professor Alfred Church, William H. Rideing, Washington Gladden, Harriet Prescott Spofford, Amelia E. Barr, Frances Courtenay Baylor, Harriet Upton, and many others. Edmund Alton will write a series of papers on the "Routine of the Republic."—how the President works at the White House, and how the affairs of the Treasury, the State and War Departments, etc., are conducted; Joseph O'Brien, a well known Australian journalist, will describe "The Great Island Continent;" Elizabeth Robins Pennell will tell of "London Christmas Pantomimes" (Alice in Wonderland, etc.); John Burroughs will write "Meadow and Woodland Talks with Young Folk," etc., etc. Mrs. Burnett's short serial will be, the editor says, a worthy successor to her famous "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which appeared in ST. NICHOLAS.

Why not try ST. NICHOLAS this year for the young people in the house? Begin with the November number. Send us $3.00, or subscribe through booksellers and newsdealers. The Century Co. 33 East 17th St. New York.

SILK DEPARTMENT.

We Have Just Made

A large and Important Purchase of Black Silks a much under the cost of manufacture. Made by the best manufacturer in the country, every yard warranted to give satisfaction.

Lot 1, 80c, never sold before under $1.

Lot 2, 87½c, never sold before under $1.25.

Lot 3, $1.12½, never sold before under $1.50.

Lot 4, $1.25, never sold before under $1.75.

A Great Many People May Wonder

How we can sell Staple Goods like Black Silks so much under value. The facts are these. Black Silks the past year or so have been very slow sale all over the country, and manufacturers have accumulated large stocks on their hands.

Now is the Time to Unload Before the End of the Year.

We have received large quantities of the above four qualities. We recommend them as the very best Blacks made in America. A year ago we sold the same goods at $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 and $2. This is probably the most important

SALE of BLACK SILKS

That has ever been made by any single house in the state. Inspection invited.

LOOK AT THE EXTRAORDINARY BARGAINS

We offer in Colored Satins at 25c, every shade in Stock suitable for Fancy Work.

50 pieces Fancy Velvets at 36c, sold last spring a $1 per yard.

40 pieces 18 inch Silk Plushes at 50c, sold last month at $1.

When the above lot is sold the price will be $1 again. We could sell the entire lot in New York for 75c. We have

MADE the PRICE 50c,

To our retail customers, and will hold the lot for their benefit.

t

A gentleman from New York called on us last week representing a velvet and plush manufacturer in Crefeld, Ger., where most of the large velvet manufacturers have their factories. Said he did not understand how we could sell goods at the Prices we had them Marked.

He purchased 10 yards of the fancy striped at 36c, to show his house what was being done in Springfield. He said the goods would not last two hours if we had them in New York. We are always glad to be able to

Place Such BARGAINS

Before our Palmer friends, for the reason they are always appreciated.

AN INITIATED DRUMMER.

One thing I like about these "Knights of the Road" is that they are great fellows for secret societies. Most all the drummers belong to everything that is going from the "Grand Knights of the Diamond Gater" down to the "Sons of intemperance." I am quite a hand for all such mysterious things, so I get solid with all the boys. My old friend Crookston called on me t'other day to see if I needed any drugs and to have a visit. We had a jolly old time. While settin' in the office a chap came in and wanted to borrow $2 on account of a remittance not coming to him as he expected. I told him my $2 I kept to lend was in now, being sent in the day before by Johnny McIntire, but I never lent it except to drummers. He said "That's me." I gave him the grand hailing sign of an Odd Fellow, which he tumbled to. Then I come the great "hair in the soot" grip of a Pythonic, He tumbled. Then Crook gave him the G. B. of the Sons of Malta. He was on to it. Then I gave him the hair poking signal of a Good Tippler. He smiled and said "H. O." This is a chemical term, meaning "waters." Then Crook struck out his hand and gave him the noted P. D. Q. sign of a Royal Arch Brick Mason. He "got thar" on that. Then Crookston examined him as follers, to make sure he was a drummer:

"From whence comest thou, pard?"

"From the Lodge of the Holy St. Johns, Michigan."

"What seek ye here to do?"

"To seek a few orders and collect a bill of Bilson."

"Then you are a drummer?"

"I am so taken and accepted by all the boys."

"How may I know you to be a drummer?"

"By my cheek and my fifty pound sample case. Try me."

"How will you be tried?"

"By the square?"

"Why by the square?"

"Because the square is a magistrate and an emblem of stupidity."

"Where were you first prepared to be a drummer?"

"In my mind."

"Where next?"

"In a printing office, adjoining a regular post of drummers."

"How were you prepared?"

"By being divested of my last cent, my cheek rubbed down with a brick, a bunion plaster over each eye, and a heavy sample case in each hand. In this fix I was conducted to the door of the post."

"How did you know it was a door, being blind?"

"By first stepping in a coal scuttle and afterwards bumping my head against the door knob."

"How gained you admission?"

"By benefit of my cheek."

"Had you the required cheek?"

"I had not, but Steve Oars had it for me."

"How were you received?"

"On the sharp toe of boot, applied to my trousers."

"What did this teach you?"

"Not to fool around too much."

"What happened next?"

"I was set down on a cake of ice and asked if I put my trust in mechanical reports."

"Your answer!"

"Not if I know myself, I don't."

"How was you next handled?"

"I was put straddle of a goat made out of a 2x4, and trotted nine times around the room by four worthy brothers, and then brought in front of the Left Bower for further instructions."

"How did he instruct you?"

"To approach a customer in three upright, regular steps, with my business card extended at right angle, my arms forming a perfect square."

"How was you then disposed of?"

"I was again seated on the cake of ice in front of a dry-goods box, and made to take the following horrible and binding oath:

I, Charles S. Robinson, do hereby and herein most everlastingly and diabolically swear, by the Great Bob Tail Flush, that I will never reveal and always steal all the trade secrets I can for the use and benefit of this Most August Order. And I further swear by the Bald Headed Jack of Clubs, that I will never give, carve, make, hold, take or cut prices below the regular rates. And I further swear, by the Pipers that played before Moses, to never have any commercial dealings with any man or his wife, sister, grandmother, old maid aunt or uncle unless they, he, she or it is sound on the goose. Binding myself under no less a penalty than to have my gripsack slit from top to bottom, my dirty shirts and socks taken out, and my reputation removed and buried in the river at Pearl street bridge, where the Salvation Army ebbs and flows every two and one-half hours. So help me Bob Ingersoll, and keep me in backbone.

"I was then asked what I most needed."

"What was your reply?"

"Money!"

"What did you then behold?"

"A copy of Dun & Co.'s reports, open at chapter 'Muskegon.' Upon the open book rested a pair of drug scales, in one pan of which reposed ten pounds of concentrated lye, and in the other sat a small silver jackass."

"What did this emblem signify?"

"The scales indicated the balance between debtor and creditor. The other emblems represented the lie-abilities and ass sets of bankrupts."

"Did this teach you any lesson?"

"You bet! It taught me the fact that the former are generally so mighty much better than the later."

"Shake! Brother! * * * Will you be off or from?"

"Both if I can borrow money enuff to get out of town on."

"Have you any cigars?"

"I have."

"Give 'em to me."

"I did not receive 'em, neither will I so impart 'em."

"How will you dispose of 'em?'

"On sixty days' time or 2 per cent cash, F. O. B."

"All right, begin."

"No, begin you."

"No, you begin."

"Up." "'Em." "Set."

"'Set 'em up.' The words and sign are right. Brother Snooks, he is a yard wide and all wool, and you can bet on him."

Brother Crookston and I both lent the chap $5, and he left with many thanks and kind wishes.

Now you can see by this what a help it is to a feller when he gets dead broke among strangers to have these little things to fall back on.

The Great Popularity

The Incurable Cured.

HOPKINSVILLE, KY., Feb. 24th, 1887.

Gentlemen—Seven years ago a sore developed on my nose from a finger nail scratch. I tried a few simple remedies, but the sore would not yield. I grew worse every year for seven years. Many thought I had a cancer. Over a year ago I commenced taking S. S. S., and two bottles entirely cured me. When I began with Swift's Specific I was in very poor health, and could hardly drag about. After I had finished the course of S. S. S. I was strong and bouyant, and had a good appetite. I regard it as a most valuable medicine for ladies in weak, delicate health. It is a household medicine with me. Yours respectfully,

MRS. R. W. WILSON.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., April 2, 1887.

Gentlemen—For twenty years I have had a sore on my left cheek. It had gradually been growing worse. The many physicians whom I had consulted were unable to do me any good. Last fall a year ago I began using S. S. S. At first it inflamed the sore, and it became more virulent than ever; so much so, indeed, that my family insisted that I should leave off the medicine. I persisted in using the S. S. S. At the end of two months the sore was entirely healed. Thinking that the evil was out of my constitution, I left off the medicine; but in November, ten months after, a very slight breaking out appeared. I at once began again on S. S. S., and now that is also disappearing. I have every faith in S. S. S. It has done me more good than all the doctors and other medicines I ever took.

Yours truly,

A. R. SHANDS.

WINSTON, N. C., April 12, 1887.

Gentlemen—Two or three years ago a cancer came on my face. It soon grew to be quite large. It wore on me, and my general health was very poor. Last September I began a course of S. S. S., which I have continued to the present time with the happiest result. The cancer has entirely disappeared, there being no evidence or symptom of a cancerous character left. My general health is good now, and my appetite better than it has been in years. I am 82 years old, and to-day I am working in the field planting corn. Yours truly,

JONAS LIMBACH.

Gentlemen—I had a sore on my upper lip for eight years. Seven different doctors attempted in vain to heal it. One gave me a small vial for five dollars, which was a "certain cure." It is needless to say that it did me no good. About two years ago I became quite uneasy, as people thought I had a cancer, and I took a course of eighteen bottles of S. S. S. The result has been a complete cure. The ulcer or cancer healed beautifully, leaving scarcely a perceptible scar. From that day I have been in excellent health, the Specific having purified my blood thoroughly, increased my appetite and perfected my digestion. In a word, I feel like a new woman, and, best of all, the eight year ulcer is gone entirely. Yours sincerely,

MRS. W. P. CANNON.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer as demonstrations of the unequalled excellency of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century. A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. What it is to be Forty.

To discover a sprinkling of gray in your beard,
And a thinness of crop where the upland is cleared;
To note how you take to your slippers and gown,
And hug to the fire when you get home from town—
Ah, that's what it is to be forty.

To find that your shadow has portlier grown,
That your voice has a practical business-like tone,
That your vision is tricky, which was once so bright,
And a hint of a wrinkle is coming to light—
Ah, that's what it is to be forty.

A sleigh-ride, a party, a dance or dine,
Why, of course you'll be present, you never decline,
But, alas! there's no invite, you're not "young folks," you see;
You're no longer a peach, but a crab-apple tree,
Ah, that's what it is to be forty.

A daughter that grows up like a lily, a queen,
And that blooms like a rose in a garden of green,
A dapper young clerk in an ice cream saloon,
Both a dude and a dunce, is to carry off soon;
And a boy that is ten and the pride of your eye,
Is caught smoking vile cigarettes on the sly—
Ah, that's what it is to be forty.

At twenty a man dreams of power and fame;
At thirty his fire has a soberer flame;
At forty his dreams and visions are o'er
And he knows and he feels as he ne'er did fore
That a man is a fool till he's forty.

Ah, we're young and we're old and we're green and we're gray,
And the law of our living is change and decay;
Come, see the lone spot in the Valley of Tears,
Where your baby lies low in the cradle of years,
When no longer on earth he's forty.

SAVED BY A BRAVE GIRL.

"Indeed, Miss McLaughlin, it is not only possible but easy of accomplishment."

"I think not. The attempt would be hazardous. No one should endanger his life in such a way."

The afternoon sun shown warmly on the Bridgewater cliffs. The soft murmur of the sea fell faintly on the ear. There was peace in the air and on the sea.

Mark Hilton's usual clear-headed judgement was somewhat disturbed this afternoon, for was not Kitty McLaughlin with him? It was not every day he had her all to himself three miles from human habitation. However he might strive to conceal, his elation would show itself in his face and speech. Nature was in opposition with his mood.

This was no ordinary pair, Mark Hilton was 24, handsome—not a pretty man. He was tall and straight, possessing a face of peculiarly interesting cast. His manner, and at times his speech, exhibited the slight awkwardness often seen in those who are given to habits of seclusion. He did not much affect general society; he was a man with an object in life, and that object was not mere personal popularity. Mark Hilton was, in the highest sense of the word, a gentleman.

Miss Kate McLaughlin was 19 years of age, tall and well formed. She had a pleasant and intelligent face. People did not consider her beautiful, Mark Hilton to the contrary notwithstanding. What most distinguished her was her remarkable gracefulness of speech and manner. She was finely educated, and, like Hilton, possessed a marked individuality. The young men who sought her society were well treated, but, with the exception of Hilton, made small progress in their efforts to acquire her confidence and to become more intimate. There was a line they could not cross. They could never see the reason why. She did. She knew that even the alchemy of love could not unite gold and lead without debasing the former. It must be gold with gold to preserve the standard.

The subject which Mark Hilton and Kitty McLaughlin were discussing so earnestly was the possibility of safely reaching a certain tiny blue flower which grew far out on the rugged face of the cliff. Kitty had discovered it in its isolated position a few moments before, and, remarking that it was unlike any they had seen during the day, wondered what it could be. The distance was so great she could not decide, although a good botanist. Mark, with more enthusiasm than judiciousness, volunteered to get it for her, a proposal that she would not listen to.

"Nonsense!" returned Mark. "There is no danger worth mentioning. Don't you see there is a line of shelving rock jutting out from behind the cliff, which leads directly to it?"

"But you might slip or become dizzy. It must be a hundred feet to the bottom," she said.

"Slipping is impossible with these on," said Mark, calling attention to his rubber-soled lawn tennis shoes, "and my head always was a steady one."

"But you shall not imperil you life in such a foolhardy attempt," said Kitty, decidedly.

"Oh, yes, I will. You don't know what a determined fellow I am when I get started," answered Mark with a laugh; and in a second he was several feet out on the face of the crag.

The shelving rock along which he undertook to make his way was barely four inches in width. A difficult pathway. There was nothing to cling to except occasional sharp points which jutted out from the mass of rock.

Slowly and carefully he advances.

Kitty watches him intently, pale and breathless with suspense.

A few steps more and he will reach it.

Ah! he has it, and holds it up triumphantly to her view.

She waves her handkerchief, not daring to speak for fear of startling him.

Now for the return. He starts back along the precarious pathway. He suddenly stops and hesitates. Why so long? Is it to rest? No; he is testing a portion of the rock with his foot. Has he become suspicious of his highway! Yes, and with good reason. He bears on it harder, when a sudden roar, followed by a terrible crash, reverberates from cliff to cliff.

A deep silence follows. What has happened? Has Mark Hilton passed forever from human eyes? No; there he is on his narrow pathway, clinging closely to the ledge. A huge piece of rock, constituting part of the perilous road, has scaled off, leaving the cliff nearly as smooth as glass for six or eight feet in front of him.

His return is cut off.

The sun has become obscured by heavy dark clouds. A wind has arisen. The sea no longer murmurs soft, but sends forth a sullen, ominous roar. How suddenly everything has changed.

Mark Hilton realizes his situation. He cannot go forward; he cannot go back, except a few feet. Above him the perpendicular rock rises to the heighth of ten feet before the top of the cliff is gained. It is smooth, except a few slight projections here and there. No mortal could climb it. Mark knows this and yet he feels that he must try. He cannot long remain in his present position.

Were this beautiful day and his life to end together? Had he brought this girl—whom he had intended soon to ask to be his wife—to this lonely, isolated spot only to witness his exit from the world; the world in which he had hoped to accomplish so much. The thought of death, when in close proximity to it, is a dreadful thing, especially to a young person.

Kitty McLaughlin, when she realized the catastrophe which had overtaken her lover, was so appalled that she could neither speak nor move. She stood like one paralyzed until the voice of Mark calling to her not to be alarmed brought her back to the world of reason.

Kitty was not one to long remain inactive if there was anything she could do. Coming to the top of the cliff above his head, she cried:

"Oh, Mark! (there was no 'Mr. Hilton' now. On the verge of death as he was, Mark noted this with a thrill of pleasure.) Can you hold on until I get assistance?"

Mark made a rapid calculation. Three miles to the nearest house, and the roughest possible path. It would take at least an hour for help to reach him. Too well he knew he could not retain his hold for half that time. He was already much exhausted and was becoming dizzy. It required a great effort to keep from falling.

"No," said Mark mournfully. "We must shout for help, and if no one comes I must attempt to—scale—the—cliff!"

The clear, agonized voice of the girl rose on the air, but was nearly drowned by the ever-increasing roar of the sea. Mark's deep voice penetrated but little farther. Neither could be heard a half mile. Their cries reechoed from crag to crag until there seemed to be a score of voices calling. A score calling—but not one replying.

After a few moments spent in this way it became evident that it was useless. Mark was growing weaker. He felt the necessity of making his perilous effort before losing more strength.

Without a word he lays hold of some sharp points of rock above him and attempts to ascend. When up about three feet his foot suddenly slips, and half unconscious, he feels himself roughly sliding down the face of the cliff. Throwing out his hand by instinct, one of them reaches a fissure in the rock and he finds himself, faint and breathless, in his original position. Nothing but a miracle saved him from going over the precipice.

Kitty hearing the noise, cried out in an agony of apprehension.

"It is no use," called poor Mark; "a cat could not climb it—much less a man. I must remain here until I fall from exhaustion, unless somebody comes. And what could they do if they did?"

Kitty was in despair. Must she remain quiet and see her lover perish. She never realized before now how she loved him, or, indeed, that she loved him at all. And she was the cause of his peril! A pang of anguish shot through her when she thought of this.

What should she do? She looked about wildly.

Ah! the milkweed!

The hill was covered with it. Her knowledge of botany was not useless.

Running to the verge of the cliff, she cried:

"What is the longest possible time you can hold on?"

"Twenty or twenty-five minutes," said Mark, feebly.

"Then for heaven's sake cling."

Rushing back she pulled up a score of the largest stalks of milkweed. Selecting one she rolled the fiber into a cord or string. How often she had seen her teacher do this when botanizing! She knew the cord thus formed to be very strong, capable of supporting at least 25 pounds. Four of these twisted together made a substantial rope, but they were so very short—not more than two feet in length!

Milkweed after milkweed succumbed to her deft fingers, until at length, by frequent splicing, she had a rope ten feet long and four strands strong. It would easily bear 100 pounds. This was enough—his own efforts, aided by the projecting rocks and fissures, would accomplish the rest.

Kitty, in spite of her celerity, was nearly twenty minutes manufacturing the rope. She knew that Mark's strength must be most gone.

Hearing her approach the brink alone the poor fellow lost all courage, supposing her unknown mission had failed.

"Good by, Kitty, I'—

"O Mark! Hold on! Hold on a minute longer!" and she flung him the rope.

He summoned up all his strength. Seeing the rope he took it in his hands and said with surprise:

"Will it hold?"

"Yes; your whole weight probably. But that will not be necessary. Let me know when you are ready."

"Brace yourself! If I am too much of a burden let go instantly; for heaven's sake don't let me pull you over the precipice. Ready!"

Up, up, he goes, his hope lending him superhuman strength. He makes every projection and depression of the rock contributed to his support. His feet often slip, but the rope, with the strong, brave girl at the farther end, upholds him. A moment more and he falls fainting at the top of the cliff.

Kitty is about to faint, but seeing his condition, recovers herself and hastens to a neighboring spring for water. Mark soon revives, but his mind is clouded. Looking around he says:

"The flower! Where is the flower?"

"Never mind that, dear"—he thought she said "dear," but was so nearly unconscious as never to be sure—"It is safe. Don't talk now until you are feeling better."

A few minutes and he is himself again. Holding up the flower, bruised and broken, which he has clung to with a lover's care though all his peril, he says:

"Not much of a gift, but I got it for you."

"Why, it is a forget-me-not," cries Kitty.

"Yes, a forget-me-not, and its 'language' is 'true love.' Oh, Kitty! let it be an emblem of the love I bear you," presenting it to her.

"As such I accept it," she replies softly.

THE PUNCH PHOTOGRAPH.

Much complaint has been made in consequence of the introduction of a new ticket system on overland roads to Califonia. The trouble all arises from the fact that the ticket given at the Missouri river by the overland agents contains what is called a "punch photograph" of the holder. This is supposed to be a complete description of the passenger. Along the margin of the ticket is printed, in a straight column, the following words in small, black type:—

Male—Female.
Slim—Medium—Stout.
Young—Middle-aged—Elderly.
Eye. Light—Dark.
Hair. Light—Dark.
Beard. Moustache—Chin—Side—None.

The passenger is photographed on the ticket bearing his signature by punching out all the words that are not descriptive of him. If for a male, the word "female" is cut out by the punch; if he is slim, the words "medium" and "stout" are punched; if his eyes are light, the word "dark" is stricken out; and if he wears no beard, the word "none" is left standing, while "moustache," "chin" and "side" are punched. Now, it is readily seen how a train agent passing hurriedly through a crowded car is likely to make errors in describing his passengers on their tickets, and so far from being a "photograph" of the holder, the marginal sketch often becomes a rank caricature. Even where the punch-marks faithfully portray the features and figure, the female passenger cannot always preserve her good temper on looking at the picture drawn for her. A well-developed lady of an uncertain age is not likely to consider it a compliment to be labeled in bold type as "stout" and "elderly." That, however, is nothing to the treatment received by a Boston girl on her way to California, who was "photograph" as being "female" of medium build, middle-age, dark eyes and hair, and a side beard. This description, while containing evidences of careless, free-hand portraiture, is not, however, as bad as that of an olive-complexioned young lady who was punched as on elderly "male," slim and with light eyes and hair and a chin beard. Tourist passengers on the overland trains often derive great amusement from a comparison of notes, or, rather, of tickets, but their fun is turned to disgust when they are told that they cannot secure return passage on the ticket when they have been wrongly portrayed by the train agent.—San Francisco Chronicle.

THANKING FOR A KICK.

Caller (in newspaper office)—"Twenty years ago I wrote a poem."

Editor—"Yes?"

"I brought it to this office, and you refused to publish it."

"Very likely."

"I remember that I mentally put you down then as a confounded idiot who did not know enough to ache when hurt."

"Naturally."

"I looked that poem over again the other day and have come to see you about it."

"Ah!"

"I have come to say that if I looked as green twenty years ago as that poem proves me to have been, I thank you for not cutting me up and feeding me to the cows. Good day."

The editor drew a long chalk mark under the table. It was the first case in all his experience in which twenty years had begotten sense enough to understand that it is sometimes necessary to be cruel to be kind.—Binghampton Republican.

CLISTIAN CHINESE AND MELICAN HEATHEN.

A Chinaman applied for the position of cook in a family in one of our Western cities. The lady of the house and most of the family were members of a fashionable church, and they were determined to look well after the character of the servants. So when John Chinaman appeared at the door he was asked, "Do you drink whisky?" "No," said he, "I Clistian man." "Do you play cards?" "No, I Clistian man." He was employed and gave great satisfaction. He did his work, was honest, upright, correct and respectful. After some weeks the lady gave a "progressive eucher" party and had wine at the table. John Chinaman was called upon to serve the party, and did so with grace and acceptability. But next morning he waited on the lady and said he wished to quit work. "Why, what is the matter?" she inquired. John answered: "I Clistian man; I tole you so before, no workee for Melican heathen!"—Christian Advocate.

Be Still.

Be still, O heart of mine!
What is thy puny will
When matched with God's almightiness?
O human heart, be still,
His ways are not our ways,
And not like ours His thought;
He fills a vast immensity,
Compared with Him we're naught.

Be still, O heart of mine,
Nor beat thy prison bars,
Thou canst not, with thy finite sense,
Reach out beyond the stars,
God reigns in truth and love;
He knows the toil and strife,
E'en from the farther stretch of time,
Of every human life.

Be still, O heart of mine,
And question not His will,
Thou canst not read his purposes,
O human heart be still.
He reigns o'er every land,
And though beyond our sight,
We know He reigns in righteousness,
For all his ways are right.

ON THE VERGE OF CONFESSION.

It was a New Bedford man who, when a terrible storm set in one night, rushed into the house of a neighbor and cried out:

"Jones, this is the ending up of the earth!"

"I'm afraid so—I'm afraid so," was the reply.

"And what shall we do?"

"Make your peace with heaven."

The wind blew still stronger, the house began to shake, and the excited man exclaimed:

"Jones, you lost five bushels of wheat last fall?"

"Yes."

"And you have your suspicions?"

"I have. The man who took my wheat had better own up."

"Can you forgive him?"

"I can."

"Well—" Here the wind suddenly dropped, and after a look through the window the conscious-stricken man turned and finished, "Yes, if ever I meet him I'll advise him to call around."—N. Y. Mercury.

"Good night, mamma," said little Frank as he put down his little brown head on the pillow. Mamma stood at the door, just ready to go down stairs. "Good night, mamma. Will the little small voice I hear in the night hurt me?"

"No, my darling."

"It's God's voice, isn't it, mamma?"

"Yes, my darling."

"The minister said it was, didn't he, mamma?"

"Yes love."

"Was it God's voice that said 's'cat, s'cat,' under the window last night?"—Detroit Tribune.

THE STRONGEST BUTTER.—Gov. Seward used to tell a good story about Gov. Draper, who was dining one day at the Congress Hall hotel, where the butter happened to be particularly rank. "Here John," said Draper to a favorite waiter who was standing behind him, "John, take this butter away; some people like their butter stronger than others." John took the plate, held it up to his nose a moment with the air of a connoisseur, then put it back again in its place, and observed in a firm voice: "Mister Draper, that is the strongest butter in the house."—American Grocer.

A man near London recently made a bet that he could kill, clean, cook, and eat a spring chicken in fifteen mieutes. Preparatory to the contest he secured the chicken and provided himself with a pot of boiling water, a bucket of cold water, a hot skillet, and a hot flat-iron. When time was called he jerked the chicken's head off, doused it in a pot of boiling water, slipped the feathers off, cleaned it, and then laid the fry flat in the pan, with the flat-iron on top to cook the upper side. At the close of eleven and a half minutes he had the chicken bones beautiful polished.

SHE HAD MONEY.—She wasn't very young, but she had money. He didn't want the earth. "Dearest," he began, but she stopped him. "I anticipate what you would say, Mr. Sampson," she said, "and I would spare your feelings, for it can never, never be. I esteem you highly, and will be a sister to—" "I have four sisters already," he replied, bitterly, "four grown sisters, and life is a hideous burden. But oh, Clara," he went on passionately, "if you cannot be my wife will you not give me a mother's protecting love? I am an orphan."

"Where are the girls of the past!" asks a newspaper poet. Well, they're still kicking around. A great many of them spent the summer at Minnetonka. From April to December in three days is pretty fast traveling, and yet we have made the trip this week with the aid of "Old Prob." Monday was as mild and balmy as the first days of spring, and yesterday morning the mercury was only 4° above zero, the coldest of the season thus far.

The Wright Wire Cloth Co. has recently put in a furnace for melting over their refuse zinc, an article which is unmarketable, but still represents a considerable saving when it can be remelted. It has been stated that the reservoir of the Palmer Water Company did not contain water enough to fight a large fire. The other day it was desired to draw down the water in the lower reservoir two feet, and to do this it required the opening of three pipes, 12, 8 and 4 inches in diameter, full head for 24 hours. As the upper reservoir is much larger than the lower, there is no probability that a lack of water will ever be felt.

At the district court last Saturday, John Lester of Three Rivers, for drunkenness was called upon to pay $3 and cost, but appealed. Henry Dalton of Wales was sent up on Tuesday because he lacked $8.55 wherewith to settle for his debauch. Yesterday the court thought that James Wells should pay $3 and costs for an assault on Andrew Holt, but James appealed.

A meeting of the base ball enthusiasts of the village was held at the district court room Tuesday evening. It seemed to be the general feeling that Palmer should have a good team in the field for '88, and that the work of securing players should begin at once. There are several good players who would like to come to Palmer if they can secure work here, and an effort is being made to secure twenty individuals who will give $5 each to help the thing along, and as many other names as possible for smaller sums. Another meeting will be held next Tuesday evening, and if enough money is pledged by that time a manager will be chosen, also a board of directors, as it is thought desirable to have some one to back up the manager, and not have him stand alone for the public to criticise. The aim is to have a first-class club or none at all.

It is seldom that Palmer people are offered an opportunity to enjoy such a first-class entertainment as will be presented at the Congregational church next Monday evening, when the Hodgkin Concert Company will give one of their popular concerts. This company has been in New England only once, last winter, when it played in a few of the large cities, including Boston, where the entertainment was so pleasing and satisfactory that the company was engaged by the same course for this season, and it is while on their way there that Palmer is to be favored next Monday night. Miss Anna Hodgkin is called one of the best, if not the best whistler on the stage. She also plays upon 24 different instruments, and will use 12 of them here. The fact that the Boston course engaged them a second time is a guarantee that this entertainment is first-class, and one which all will enjoy.

The Station Approach Once More.

REPORT OF THE RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS ON THE SUBJECT.

The railroad commissioners have rendered a decision in the matter of providing an additional approach to the union passenger station, and their report is as follows:

In accordance with chapter 189 of the acts of the year 1887, the board gave a hearing to all persons in interest, at the station of the Boston and Albany railroad in Palmer, at 5 p. m. on Wednesday, November 1, 1887, notice thereof having been duly published in the Springfield Republican and posted in the town of Palmer. The meeting was duly adjourned to the district court-room. Some of the citizens of the town were represented by George D. Robinson, and others by Stephen S. Taft. The Boston and Albany railroad was represented by its vice president, J. A. Rumrill.

The citizens represented by Mr. Robinson desired that a tunnel should be built, starting at the northeast end of the station, running under the railroad diagonally and terminating on Main street at the westerly side of Hatch's Block, so called, as shown on a plan, and they submitted drawings thereof, showing a tunnel 116 feet long, 8 feet wide and 8 feet high in the center, with 20 steps on the station end and 23 steps on the Main street side, besides an inclined walk. The steps were to be 7 by 12, and the tunnel to be lighted by four patent skylights three feet square. They submitted an estimate placing the cost of construction at $4000.

Mr. Taft, representing other citizens, advocated a footway on the west side of the station, beginning at the westerly end of the platform and descending by steps to a point about four feet above the level of Commercial street, where it passes under the railroad tracks, then turning at a right angle and running along the line of Commercial street, at a level, until the grade of the footway and the grade of the street meet, and then on the regular sidewalk to Main street. One man advocated an overhead bridge. In behalf of those favoring the tunnel route, it was claimed that the act requires a new footway either over or under the tracks of the railroad, all the way from the station to Main street.

In behalf of the railroad it was claimed that the provisions of the act would be complied with by building a flight of steps from the westerly end of the platform down to Commercial street, where it crosses under the tracks.

The board is of the opinion that a reasonable interpretation of the statute lies between these two extremes, and that the words, "A footway or other additional approach to its station in the town of Palmer, for the accommodation of persons traveling on foot between said station and Main street in said town," do not absolutely require that such new footway should extend the whole distance from the station to Main street. If such had been the intention of the statute, the words, "A new footway from the station to Main street," or words to that effect, would have been used. On the other hand, the board is of the opinion that the act contemplates some additional method of getting over or under the tracks, or some improvement of existing methods. There are therefore, three ways in which the provisions of the act can be complied with, first, the tunnel from the easterly end of the station to Main street, second, the plan advocated by Mr. Taft as aforesaid, making use of a portion of the location of Commercial street, and third, an overhead bridge.

The proposed tunnel has many disadvantages. It would be about 116 feet long, and would, in the opinion of the board, be a place through which women and children would dislike to travel even in the day time. The petitioners estimated that the cost of such a tunnel would be $4000. The Boston and Albany railroad company estimates the cost at $11,500, and the board believes that the latter estimate is more nearly correct than the former. Moreover, if such a tunnel should be built, the company would be at constant expense for lighting and keeping clean and dry.

The board has no way of knowing how great a burden the Legislature intended to impose upon the Boston and Albany railroad in this matter, but as the company has just built at a large expense an elegant station and extended platforms, and as there is access to the station on the east side by an overhead bridge opposite Church street and on the west by Commercial street which passes under the tracks; and as the board is not aware of any misdemeanore on the part of the road toward the town of Palmer which calls for punishment, it does not seem to the board that the Legislature could have contemplated or that there is anything in the circumstances that would justify an order requiring the railroad to furnish additional means of access to its station, at an expenditure so large, as would be necessary in order to build the tunnel.

Coming next to the plan advocated by Mr. Taft, the board believes that it is the best plan that has yet been suggested, and will prove on the whole the most convenient and desirable. By this route, the distance from the corner of Commercial and Main streets to the depot is 455 feet, or 70 feet less than the distance from the same corner to the same point by the way of the tunnel, so that the Commercial street route will be shorter for all persons coming from points west of Commercial street.

From the post office, as now located at the corner of Walnut and Main streets, the distance by the way of Commercial street is about 200 feet more than by the tunnel, and for people coming down Central street, the distance by way of Commercial street is about 380 feet more than by way of the tunnel.

For a portion, therefore, of the village in the town of Palmer, the tunnel would be the shorter route to the station, but for the other three villages in the town, inasmuch as they lie west of Commercial street, the Commercial street route would be the shorter. The village around the station was said at the hearing to embrace about one-third of the population of the town, and it would be only a portion of that third which would find the tunnel route the shorter, while the remaining portion of this third, and the other two-thirds, would find the Commercial route shorter. This advantage in favor of the Commercial street route is lessened by the fact that a great many people wish to stop at the post office on the way to or from the cars, and for all such, this Commercial street route would, as has been stated, be 200 feet longer that the tunnel route. On the other hand, it is to be borne in mind, that the location of the post office is not unalterable, and would in fact probably be changed, if the Commercial street route were adopted.

The Commercial street plan contemplates taking away the easterly abutment of the street, where it passes under the railroad tracks, and building a new abutment on the east side of the Commercial street location, thus widening the passage under the tracks from about 16 to 32 feet; this will give eight feet more for the driveway, and an eight-foot walk. This sidewalk should be kept from three to four feet above the level of the driveway, as it is unnecessary to have more than 7½ or 8 feet head room, and should be carried on a level until it strikes the grade of Commercial street. The descent to it from the platform would be easy. It would have many advantages over the proposed tunnel. It would be shorter—not more than 75 feet in length. It would be very much lighter, inasmuch as it would get the full benefit of the roadway opening of 24 feet. Only one flight of steps would be necessary, whereas the proposed tunnel requires two, and the opening from the station platform would give a side light of considerable value to the carriage-way.

As this plan contemplates the use of a portion of a county road, and an expenditure on the part of the county, the board can make no order relating thereto, except subject to the assent of the county through its proper officers, and an agreement as to the division of the cost.

The only alternative is an overhead bridge. As compared with the Commercial street plan, such a structure has obvious disadvantages. It is necessary to rise from the platform about 20 feet, whereas the descent on the Commercial street plan would only be about 10 feet. Such an overhead bridge would cost about $2500, and in the opinion of the board, would not be so well liked as the Commercial street plan. That the position of this overhead bridge should be at the west end of the platform as shown on the plan, is determined not only by the foregoing considerations concerning distances, but also by the the fact that an overhead bridge at or near the location of the proposed tunnel, would obstruct the view of some of the signals for the New London Northern crossing, which signals could not with safety be placed so far from the crossing as the tunnel site.

The statute requires the board of railroad commissioners to order and determine the location and manner of construction of the footway or other additional approach to the station." The desirability of an alternative order was evidently not contemplated, but the board feels that the plan making use of Commercial street would give so much better satisfaction, in the long run, that it feels justified in ordering that such plan shall be carried out as herein suggested, provided an agreement with proper officials of the county can be entered into before the first day of February next; and if such agreement cannot be made, then it orders the Boston and Albany railroad to construct an overhead iron bridge, in accordance with plans herewith submitted, the footway for which shall start from a point near the westerly end of the station platform, and end on Commercial street at a point about 138 feet from Main street. For the board,

GEORGE G. CROCKER, Chairman.

Boston, November 21, 1887.

BRIMFIELD.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society had a sociable at the First church vestry Thursday evening.

The town schools commenced Monday with the following teachers: No. 1, Martha E. Stone and Lena Miller; 2, Ada M. Blodgett; 3, Fanny B. Gates; 5, Nora C. Burns; 7, Lillian M. Brown; 8, Bessie F. Brown; 10, Lizzie P. Knowlton.

WARREN.

A large delegation attended the Thomas concert at Springfield Monday evening.

The Literary society have made arrangements for a course of lectures this winter.

A union meeting for young men is held in Crescent hall every Sabbath afternoon at 5.30 o'clock.

Mr. Conway of West Brookfield has the contract for building a house for Sayles & Jenks in the lower village.

BONDSVILLE.

The fair of the French Catholics came to a successful close last Saturday evening, the sum of $782.46 being cleared for a building fund. The contest for the gold headed cane was won by Jerry Shea, who received 1223 votes, against 1047 for Alex Adams. Father Lamy desires to return thanks to all who assisted in making the fair such a success, especially O. A. Parent, who furnished the hall free, Rev. Fr. McKeany for kind words of encouragement, the Bondsville band for its excellent music, and all others to whom thanks may be due.

WEST WARREN.

Horace P. Cole was summoned home Thanksgiving day by a telegram announcing his father's death.

Beacon Light lodge of Good Templars gave a crazy tea and entertainment in Crossman's hall last night.

The Ware stage will make but two trips daily after Dec. 3d. The morning run has been suspended through the cold weather.

Constable John Collins made a good haul last Monday, bringing four Warren fellows before Judge Tyler for assaulting a man named Patrick Collins. A fifth man was found in bed with a smashed jaw, and will pay for his fun as soon as he is able to appear in court.

BELCHERTOWN.

A new baptistery is to be placed in the Baptist church in a few weeks.

B. Snow has been building a new piazza to his store, and painting and otherwise improving his place on the corner.

W. F. Geer of Becket is selling out the groceries of Thomas Smithies at wholesale, as they want to close out his business.

William Smithies, brother of Thomas Smithies, has arrived here from England to ascertain if possible the whereabouts of his brother, not knowing that he had been heard from, and will go to San Francisco before many days. It is thought Mr. Smithies must have suddenly become insane, which would account for such a strange procedure as his sudden departure.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

E. H. Cutler is expected home from Dakota next week.

The cold snap brings in the tramps in good—or bad—numbers, and about six o'clock every night inquiries are numerous for "Mr. Robbins."

The Y. P. S. C. E. contemplate a lecture course this winter if the necessary funds can be raised. The society is making up a box to send to a Utah school.

Grace church Sunday-school collection for Sunday, Nov. 21, amounting to nearly nine dollars, was sent to Boston to help the Thanksgiving dinner fund for the city poor.

About forty from here attended the funeral of Mrs. Olive Bell at Monson last Sunday. Rev. M. S. Dudley conducted the service. This is the first death among the members of Grace church.

WILBRAHAM.

Miss Mary E. Howard has been spending her vacation at Boston and vicinity.

Miss May Merrick is spending her vacation with a classmate at Somers, Ct.

Mr. J. Albray is visiting his daughter, Mrs. Judge Hodges, at Detroit, Mich.

The academy will commence next Wednesday. A large attendance is expected.

The public schools will open next week Monday with but little change of teachers.

Mrs. H. Weatherbee, with her family, is staying with her sister, Mrs. Dickinson, of Granby, a few weeks.

Mrs. Dr. Wilcox of Pascoag, R. I., has been visiting at her mother's, Mrs. E. Brewer's, the past week.

Mrs. Charles Starkweather, of Northampton, has been the guest of Mrs. E. B. Merrick the past few days.

Dr. Atwood of Boston has leased Miss L. Noble's house on Faculty street, and took possession this week.

Miss Mabel Phelps has resigned her position as teacher at Barre Plains, to accept a like position at Greenwich.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Congregational church met with Mrs. Dea. Knowlton Wednesday afternoon.

Prof. Herbert Fisk of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill., is visiting at his father's, Rev. Franklin Fisk.

The Farmers' Club will meet with Francis E. Clark on Maple street next Monday evening, to reorganize and choose officers for the coming season.

Howard Pease has accepted a position in the grocery store of his brother, Charles Pease. Mr. Pease has enlarged his store and made several improvements recently.

WALES.

Police Officer Barnes has taken three drunken fellows to Palmer this week for trial.

H. F. Thayer and family have moved to Gilbertville, where he has a position in the spinning department of mill No. 1.

William Horan, a former weaver in the mills here, was drowned Wednesday afternoon in the reservoir at Staffordville.

Willie Harrington, clerk in W. J. Baldwin's store, has recovered from his acute nervous prostration so far as to be able to be on his daily route.

Some fellows from Monson came near falling into the hands of Officer Barnes Sunday for abusing a horse which they were driving. One of them got a bad cut on his head by driving over dry goods boxes and tipping over.

The stage now leaves Wales at 7 a. m., and arrives at Palmer to connect with the 9.40 train for Boston, and leaves for Wales at 4.32 p. m. except Saturday, when it will wait for the 5.30 train from Boston.

The public schools commence Monday with Miss Flora Converse in the grammar department in the Center, and Mrs. Josie Harrington in the primary, Miss Alice Smith in the South Center, Miss Rosie Gardner in the Northeast school, and Miss Walbridge in the Northwest school.

We have some famous hunters in Wales, but it takes a York state man to put the finishing touch on. E. B. Bush of North Brookfield, N. Y., has been spending the last two weeks with C. M. Gale. They, with Chester A. Vinton, went hunting Thanksgiving day and after killing 16 rabbits ran some 'coons into a tree, and Mr. Bush showed his friends how to bag such game by killing 6 large 'coons that weighed 91½ pounds, after which the party marched triumphantly through the street showing their game, and the next day, with a party of invited guests, had an immense 'coon dinner at Mr. Gale's, which was greatly enjoyed by the participants.

THORNDIKE.

What has been known as the old Thayer Pond is being filled in with gravel.

The Ware polo team will play the Southbridge team at the rink Saturday evening.

Mrs. Henry Osborn and son have returned home after spending a vacation of two weeks with friends in Providence, R. I., and Fall River.

Services at St. Mary's church on Sunday will be held at 9 30 instead of the usual hour, 10.30, as Rev. Father Lynch is to attend confirmation at Ware.

A crowd of young men from this place visited the fair at Bondsville Saturday last, and according to all accounts made considerable disturbance, which perhaps they may be likely to hear from again.

D. G. Riley, who is studying at Middlebury College, Vermont, was in town this week, being called home to attend the funeral of his grandmother, Mrs. Ellen Wren.

Is it not surprising that we have not a doctor residing in our village? This would be a good field for a good physician to locate in, as there is not a doctor nearer than Palmer or Three Rivers to be had providing one was wanted immediately.

Mrs. Ellen Wren, one of the oldest and most respected residents of the town, died last Friday at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Patrick Riley, at the age of 78 years, being very spry and hearty for one of her age up to the time of her sickness, which was of a very brief nature.

MONSON.

The public schools will commence next Monday.

Regular meeting of the Grand Army next Monday night for special business.

Miss Clara Kingsbury of South Coventry, Ct., is the guest of Mrs. G. L. Keeney.

Miss Alice Morris entertained a party of her friends last week Thursday evening.

Oscar Thompson, of Columbia Medical College, New York, spent Thanksgiving in town.

The ladies' society of the Universalist church met with Mrs. W. J. Ricketts Tuesday afternoon.

Gage & Reynolds are shipping about 1000 dozen hats per day, which indicates a prosperous season.

Only a small number from this place attended the Thomas concert at Springfield Monday evening.

Miss Jessie L. Ryther gave a pleasant social to a number of her friends at the home of Mrs. H. G. Rogers, Wednesday evening.

Stewart & Henry have the contract for building Patrick Dalton's barn on the Wilbraham road. Sullivan & Son are doing the stone work.

Harlow Chapin, G. A. R. inspector, paid an official vist to J. W. Lawton Post of Ware last evening, which completes his duties as inspector for this year.

At the last meeting of the school board it was decided to exchange the Payson, Dunton & Scribner's copy books for the Graphic copy books, published by Lovell & Co.

The Universalist Sunday-school has commenced preparation for its annual Christmas concert, which it is intended shall be equal, if not superior, to any they have given.

As the evening mail arrives some 40 minutes earlier since the new time table took effect, the post office will close at 7.45 p. m. Tuesday and Thursday evening, commencing next week.

The Rock Band Concert Company gave a very pleasing entertainment, for the benefit of the Grand Army post, at Memorial Hall Monday evening to a large and appreciative audience. The post will realize about $20.

It would seem that the climate of California is not altogether "glorious." A former resident of this place, now of Pomona, a town of 4000 population, writes that there are 81 cases of malaria and typhoid fever in this place.

Misses Thomas, Rogers, DeRochmont and Preble gave a pleasant donkey and whist party to about twenty of their friends at the Cushman House last week Thursday evening. W. J. Randall secured the first prize and C. W. King the "booby" prize.

The first of a series of entertainments, to be given under the auspices of the Young Men's Social Club, will take place next Tuesday evening at Central Hall. The De Seve-Hood Concert Co. of Boston has been engaged for this occasion, and is undoubtedly the finest that has ever appeared here. Tickets are on sale at Keeney's, and a large number have already been sold.

The funeral of Mrs. Olive Needham Bell, wife of A. Linden Bell of North Wilbraham, was held in the M. E. church Sunday afternoon. As Mrs. Bell was a member of the North Wilbraham church, Rev. Mr. Dudley was the officiating clergyman. Among the floral emblems were two pillows with the word "Olive," one from the Christian Endeavor society of North Wilbraham, a wreath, cross and bouquet from the Sunday-school class at Monson of which Miss Bell was formerly a member.

The home of ex-commander W. J. Rickets of the Grand Army post was the scene of a pleasant gathering last Saturday evening, when friends of the Universalist society and Marcus Keep Post to the number of 75 assembled to remind the couple of the 20th anniversary of their marriage. Games and refreshments helped to pass a delightful evening, and before the guests took leave Rev. Mr. Priest in a few well-chosen words presented Mr. and Mrs. Rickets with a dinner set and an easy chair, to which Mr. Rickets responded in his usual happy manner.

The geography question in the schools is far from being settled. The latest development is a petition being circulated by one of the teachers who is in favor of Barnes's, and is working in its interest among the teachers of the town. Thus far some six teachers have expressed themselves in its favor. This course certainly seems to cast some reflection on the judgment of the school committee, which no doubt is abundantly able to judge of the merits of any books placed in the schools. It remains for Monson's school teachers to discover the merits of Barnes's geography, as at the present time only one small town in the state has adopted it, while Harper's, which these teachers have placed their judgment upon as being the poorest work, is in use in over eleven hundred towns in New England, and every large city except three, also every town on the Ware River railroad and almost every town in western Massachusetts.

Rev. F. S. Hatch Installed

PASTOR OF THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The council called to examine Rev. Franklin S. Hatch met in the chapel of the church Wednesday at 10.30 a. m., with delegates present from 16 of the invited churches. Rev. L. H. Cone of Springfield was chosen moderator, and Rev. A. T. Perry of Ware, scribe. After prayer by the moderator, the records of the church and parish meeting relative to the call of Mr. Hatch were read and approved, and the council proceeded with the examination of the candidate. Mr. Hatch had no written statement of his views, but read the creed of the church and said he fully accepted it, and was there questioned by the council, which in executive session voted unanimously to proceed with the installation. At noon a collation was served in the parlors. The audience room had been tastefully decorated, and was well filled at the afternoon exercises, which began with an organ voluntary, "Grand Offertoire" in G., followed by a quartette, "The Lord is in His Holy Temple." The minutes of the council were read by the scribe, and Rev. J. H. Kyte of Brimfield gave the invocation. "Gloria," from Mozart's 12th mass was rendered by the chorus, after which Rev. M. S. Howard of Wilbraham read the scriptures, and the quartette sang "The King of Heaven My Shepard Is. The sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. J. H. Twichell of Hartford, who took for his text Philippians 2:10, "That I may know Him and the power of His resurrection." He gave a brief outline of the events which led up to and followed the resurrection of Christ, and how that was revealed to the disciples. The faith of the resurrection once established in the church steadily advanced. When the disciples were convinced, they made everything of it; preaching it and styling themselves witnesses of the resurrection. These events were revelations of power to them, and they knew that they were redemed, and that the God of their fathers had raised up Christ as an atonement for their sins. The doctrine of Christianity, being preached ever since that time, might be called the gospel of the resurrection, and the doctrine of the resurrection is now as it was then, and it is the privilege of all ministers to preach it. The Lord made it so when he launched the church on its mighty enterprise. "All power," he said, "is given unto me in heaven and earth, go ye therefore and disciple the nations." Rev. Dr. W. L. Gage of Springfield made the installing prayer, and Rev. Dr. Llewellyan Pratt of Hartford gave the charge to the pastor, saying that he would ask the brother to make enterance to this new field of labor an effort to magnify his office; and secondly, to make it an occasion for correcting his methods and administration of work. Rev. H. W. Pope of Palmer gave the right hand of fellowship, and Rev. Dr. Burnham of Springfield the charge to the people. Rev. E. G. Selden of Springfield made the closing prayer, which was followed by congregational singing and the benediction by the pastor.

The wedding of Emma Merchant and Edward Rindge is announced for next Wednesday evening.

Miss Hattie Green was given a surprise party Thaksgiving evening by some of her schoolmates.

Theophilus Provost has bought a building lot on North street from John H. Storrs for $500.

Samuel W. Hallett, principal of the high school, had his mother from Hyannis to spend Thanksgiving with him.

Rev. J. W. Harding of Longmeadow occupied the pulpit of the East Congregational church last Sunday.

Smoke was seen issuing from the Otis Company's new chimney of the central steam plant Thursday, for the first time.

The stores are putting on their holiday attire. Christmas goods seem to be more beautiful each year, and at all prices, to suit the rich or poor.

The largest family party reported to have met Thanksgiving was with Benjamin Davis, which numbered over thirty, and still there were some absent ones.

Real estate has nearly doubled in value in some localities in Ware the past two years. In other localities it is difficult to get bids upon property that is offered for sale.

Mrs. Dr. Baldwin, a returned missionary from China, will deliver an address on the subject of her work there, at the Methodist church at six o'clock next Sunday evening.

A pair of "Jersey Red" pigs attracted considerable attention in front of the express office Wednesday morning. They came by express from Philadelphia to Daniel Collins.

Curbing has been put in on Pleasant street from North to Vigeant streets, making a bad looking corner, as it is much narrower than the eastern portion of the streets.

A parish meeting will be held at Ware Center next Monday evening, to see if the society will unite with the church in giving a call to Rev. John L Harris of Boston to become their pastor.

W. N. Cowee, formerly in the employ of George Eddy, has resigned his position at Athol where he has been the past two years, and has removed to Ware Center, stopping with F. A. Croney.

The equestrian club seemed to take but little interest in their meeting the past season, and quite a sum having accumulated from fines for non-attandance, it was expended in a supper for the club at the Mansion House, Tuesday.

The drinking cups presented to the town by E. D. Howard were attached to the fountains last week, and already one of them has been stolen from the fountain in front of J. R. Lawton's store. Mr. Howard offers $10 reward for the conviction of the thief.

John Gould, working for B. F. Davis, nearly severed the thumb of his left hand with an ax on Tuesday. The cords were cut and the bleeding was profuse. The wound was dressed by Dr. Miner, and hopes are entertained that he may not lose the use of it.

Through the winter months the West Warren stage will make but two trips per day, the morning trip being omitted.

The Ware Center Dramatic Club has in prepartion the temperance drama "My Brother's Keeper," to be presented some time the last of this month.

Those who wish to aid in a good work will purchase their holiday goods at the Episcopal society sale, which is to take place at the town hall. Arrangements are being made for a large stock of useful and ornamental articles, books, gent's furnishing goods, etc., to select from.

C. D. Henry's People's Theatre Company commences a week's engagement at Music Hall next Monday evening. This is the first time for some months that Music Hall has been opened for a public entertainment, although the audience of quite a number of shows might have been well accommodated there.

The marketmen of the village have kindly given us the figures, which are as nearly accurate as they can be, showing that there were over 3600 pounds of turkeys sold for Thanksgiving, also 3000 pounds of chickens, beside all other meats, one item of which, that of fresh pork, reached a total of nearly 2500 pounds.

Charles A. Stevens and daughter, Miss Julia M. Stevens, returned Wednesday from their three months' excursion to California. They traveled over three thousand miles in the same train of vestibule cars, visiting the Yellowstone National Park, Washington Territory, British Columbia, San Francisco and Southern California. Mr Stevens, although getting well on in years, stood the journey remarkably well, not being sick a day during his absence. Miss Stevens brings some fine pictures of the scenes through which they passed.

The treasurer of Nenameseck Council of the "American Legon of Honor" paid $5000 Wednesday to the guardian of the heirs of Charles A. Fearigo, the full face of his benefit certificate being paid without any deduction for expenses. Mr. Fearigo was 24 years old, and the total amount he had paid into the benefit fund was only 46 20. The heirs are Frank E. Fearigo and sister. The Ware council of the Legion of Honor was instituted August 1, 1881, and now has 19 members. The number of assessments the past year has been such that for a man of 50 years of age the rate has been only $15 50 per $1000.

The Ware Electric Company has purchased a lot of land near the gun shop, and work is to commence at once. The officers of the company are Henry C. Davis, president; Henry M. Clark, secretary and treasurer; these with George P. Warner of Northampton, constitute the board of directors. A large number of lamps have been subscribed for by our business men at $10 per lamp per annum, and these, with those contracted for by the town, give the company a paying business at the start. The Thompson-Houston electric light company of Boston is to put in the entire plant, and has contracted to have the work done by Feb. 1st, 1888. Poles for the wires are to be furnished by William B. Lawton.

Tuesday evening, about the time of closing work, the overseers and some of the second hands in the Otis Company's employ were called into the office to say good bye and God speed to their fellow worker, Jerome Gates, who was about to leave after 47 years in the employ of the company, all but five of these as overseer. During this time there have been seven different agents under whom he has worked, all of whom, as well as the thousands who have worked under him, can testify to the highly creditable manner in which he has discharged his duties. It is reported that the Otis Company made him a handsome present in recognition of his valuable services. In the evening the weavers and those who had been employed under him visited him at his residence and presented him with an elegant gold watch, the evening being spent in a most enjoyable manner. He left Ware with his wife Wednesday noon. They will spend a week visiting friends in Boston, Springfield, and Bridgeport, Conn., and next week Thursday will take their departure for Greenville, South Carolina, where they will spend the winter with their son.

THE MOORE–SAGENDORPH WEDDING.

The wedding of Mr. Ossian N. Moore and Miss Florence L. Sagendorph, at the bride's parents on Church street Thursday evening, was a social event of much interest. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a select company of relatives and friends by Rev. A. T. Perry, and caused special comment of favor because of the graceful manner in which it was conducted. The couple entered the parlors to the strains of a wedding march played by one of the quartette of young ladies. Floral decorations added to the beauty of the scene. The bride — very pretty in white corded silk en train—carried a bouquet of white chrysanthemums. Miss Sagendorph, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid and wore pale blue silk trimmed with swansdown of the same shade. Mr. William B. Dixon, an office comrade of Mr. Moore, was best man. Some very pretty costumes among the ladies present were noticeable, while some of the gentlemen were in full dress. The congratulations of the company immediately following the ceremony were prompt and cordial. The presents were numerous, and in many instances very costly. A check of goodly size from the bride's Calfornia uncle, and a sum of gold coin from the mother of the happy groom, appeared with the collection of articles useful and ornamental. The company was led to the dining room where tables were laden with a choice collation, which was served by a caterer engaged for the occasion. After an hour of social greetings the happy couple left the company to take a train on the Albany road for Springfield and New York. After a trip of a few days, including a stop at Washington, Mr. and Mrs. Moore will return to Ware and reside at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sagendorph, where appartments have already been prepared for them.

A STRANGE FREAK.

The wife of our esteemed citizen, Mr. John Rowell, while suffering under a severe attack of the blues, tried to commit the crime of infanticide, but was prevented by the opportune arrival of a neighbor. Her case has been considered by the best doctors incurable, but her husband was highly pleased, after using a course of Sulphur Bitters, to find that she was entirely cured.—Kingston Herald. 2w35

Harper's Bazar.

ILLUSTRATED.

Harper's Bazar is a home journal. It combines choice literature and fine art illustrations with the latest intelligence regarding the fashions. Each number has clever serial and short stories, practical and timely essays, bright poems, humorous sketches, etc. Its pattern-sheet and fashion-plate supplements will alone help ladies to save many times the cost of the subscription, and papers on social etiquette, decorative art, house-keeping in all its branches, cookery, etc., make it useful in every household, and a true prompter of economy. Its editorials are marked by good sense, and not a line is admitted to its columns that could offend the most fastidious taste.

Harper's Periodicals,

The News and the Truth

—IN THE—

Springfield Republican.

The Springfield Republican, established in 1824 by Samuel Bowles, is universally recognized as one of the leading newspapers in America. It publishes the most thorough and comprehensive reports of New England news, and ably represents the best New England ideas. It is particularly energetic in collecting the local news of Western Massachusetts and the neighboring parts of other states, Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire, and presents a full daily record of the life of this region such as can be found in no other paper.

It is vigorous, but reasonable in the expression of its editorial opinions, which are progressive, independent and liberal. It is devoted to the interests of the whole people rather than to those of any party. Recognizing the good and condemning the evil represented in the chief political bodies as now constituted, it gives its support to the side that offers the largest measure of advancement toward better, purer government and happier, more equitable social conditions.

It deals with all the vital issues of the day and offers its readers abundant and interesting examples of good literature.

The Daily Republican is sold for $8 a year, $2 a quarter, 70 cents a month, 3 cents a copy.

The Sunday Republican is $2 a year, 50 cents a quarter, 5 cents a copy.

The Weekly Republican is $1 a year, 60 cents for 6 months; 10 cents a month for trial subscriptions.

An Extraordinary Offer!

Two Weekly Papers

ONE YEAR FOR $1.25.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLICAN, a superior, carefully edited news and family journal, and THE FARM AND FIRESIDE, a popular story and agricultural weekly published by the Toronto (Canada) Mail will both be sent to any address one year for $1.25.

New subscriptions to the Weekly Republican for 1888 may date from December 1, 1887.

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES of the Superior Court now sitting in Springfield within and for the County of Hampden.

Respectfully represent the inhabitants of Palmer, a municipal corporation in said county, that on Monday, the 26th day of September, last, in legal town meeting assembled, they voted to adopt certain by-laws for said town and their action was as follows; the warrant for said meeting contained among others the following, viz:

Article 4. To see if the town will make any order or by-law regarding preserving the peace and good order of the town and maintaining the internal police thereof, particularly the dispersing of crowds from the sidewalks of the several villages of town.

Acting under said article it was voted to adopt the following by-laws:

SECTION 1. No person shall put or place or cause to be put or placed in any street, lane or alley, or other public place in the town, any house dirt, ashes, filth, shells or other kinds of rubbish.

SEC. 2. No person shall behave himself in a rude or disorderly manner, or use any indecent or profane language in any street, lane, alley or other public place in the town.

SEC. 3. No person shall swim or bathe in any pond, stream or river in the town, divested of clothing, so as to be indecently exposed to the view of any person lawfully passing or being in or upon any street, lane, alley, common, square, railroad or other public place within the town.

SEC. 4. Three or more persons shall not stand together or near each other in any street or on any footwalk or sidewalk in the town, so as to obstruct the free passage for foot passengers, any person or persons, so standing, shall move on immediately after a request, so to do, made by either of the selectmen, or any constable, public officer or watchman.

SEC. 5. No person shall be or remain upon the steps of or other projection from any church, hotel, hall or other public building, nor in any hall, space or way leading thereto, so as to incommode or obstruct the passage to and from such church, hall, hotel or building, and every person so being or remaining, when ordered by either of the selectmen, or any constable, police officer, watchman, owner, agent or other person having charge of said church, hotel, hall or other public building, shall immediately depart therefrom.

SEC. 6. Whoever shall offend against or fail to comply with any of the provisions of this ordinance, shall for each and every offence forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than two nor more than twenty dollars.

SEC. 7. No person shall be prosecuted for any offense against any of the provisions of this ordinance unless complaint for the same shall be instituted and commenced within six months from the time of committing such offense.

SEC. 8. The constables and all police officers and watchmen are especially charged to see that the provisions of this ordinance are enforced.

It was also voted: That the selectmen be a committee to present these by-laws to a proper court for their approval.

And said inhabitants pray that said by-laws may be approved by this court to the end that the wishes and intentions of said inhabitants may be carried into effect.

Palmer, Mass., October 26th, A. D., 1887.
By their Attorney,
C. L. GARDNER,

Palmer, Mass., October 26th, 1887.

I hereby certify that at a meeting of the inhabitants of Palmer, duly warned and held on Monday, the 26th day of September, last, the above mentioned by-laws were adopted, as stated in above petition, and that the article of the warrant under which said action was taken, and the votes passed by said inhabitants are fully and accurately stated and are identical with the records of said meeting now in my possession as clerk of said town, so far as said records relate to said by-laws.

MADE the PRICE 50c.

To our retail customers, and will hold the lot for their benefit.

A gentleman from New York called on us last week representing a velvet and plush manufacturer in Crefeld, Ger., where most of the large velvet manufacturers have their factories. Said he did not understand how we could sell goods at the Prices we had them Marked.

He purchased 10 yards of the fancy striped at 36c, to show his house what was being done in Springfield. He said the goods would not last two hours if we had them in New York. We are always glad to be able to

Place Such BARGAINS

The Old Army Musket.

Willie's papa had fought in the war:
He told startling tales to his folks o'er and o'er—
How he stood with his musket when others had fled,
Nor felt any tremor nor symptom of dread.

Willie's mother, however, knew better than that,
And many's the hour that she silently sat
And patiently listened to what he would say
Of his great deeds of valor in youth's sunny day.

Now Willie, one warm, placid Fourth of July,
Concluded his father's old musket he'd try,
So he pulled on the trigger with vigor and care—
And the cat all dismembered sailed out on the air.

Willie's papa was angry; he thundered and swore,
And his mother shed tears o'er the cat, now no more;
But out of her weeping she murmured, "I'll bet
That's the first time that musket did any harm yet."

The Incurable Cured.

HOPKINSVILLE, KY., Feb, 24th, 1887.

Gentlemen—Seven years ago a sore developed on my nose from a finger nail scratch. I tried a few simple remedies, but the sore would not yield. I grew worse every year for seven years. Many thought I had a cancer. Over a year ago I commenced taking S. S. S., and two bottles entirely cured me. When I began with Swift's Specific I was in very poor health, and could hardly drag about. After I had finished the course of S. S. S. I was strong and bouyant, and had a good appetite. I regard it as a most valuable medicine for ladies in weak, delicate health. It is a household medicine with me. Yours respectfully,

MRS. R. W. WILSON.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., April 3, 1887.

Gentlemen—For twenty years I have had a sore on my left check. It had gradually been growing worse. The many physicians whom I had consulted were unable to do me any good. Last fall a year ago I began using S. S. S. At first it inflamed the sore, and it became more virulent than ever; so much so, indeed, that my family insisted that I should leave off the medicine. I persisted in using the S. S. S. At the end of two months the sore was entirely healed. Thinking that the evil was out of my constitution, I left off the medicine; but in November, ten months after, a very slight breaking out appeared. I at once began again on S. S. S., and now that is also disappearing. I have every faith in S. S. S. It has done me more good than all the doctors and other medicines I ever took.

Yours truly,

A. R. SHANDS.

WINSTON, N. C., April 12, 1887.

Gentlemen—Two or three years ago a cancer came on my face. It soon grew to be quite large. It wore on me, and my general health was very poor. Last September I began a course of S. S. S., which I have continued to the present time with the happiest result. The cancer has entirely disappeared, there being no evidence or symptom of a cancerous character left. My general health is good now, and my appetite better than it has been in years. I am 82 years old, and to-day I am working in the field planting corn. Yours truly,

JONAS LIMEBACH.

Gentlemen—I had a sore on my upper lip for eight years. Seven different doctors attempted in vain to heal it. One gave me a small vial for five dollars, which was a "certain cure." It is needless to say that it did me no good. About two years ago I became quite uneasy, as people thought I had a cancer, and I took a course of eighteen bottles of S. S. S. The result has been a complete cure. The ulcer or cancer healed beautifully, leaving scarcely a perceptible scar. From that day I have been in excellent health, the Specific having purified my blood thoroughly, increased my appetite and perfected my digestion. In a word, I feel like a new woman, and, best of all, the eight year ulcer is gone entirely. Yours sincerely,

Mrs. W. P. CANNON.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle. 1ySeow

BRACE UP.

You are feeling depressed, your appetite is poor, you are bothered with Headache, you are fidgetty, nervous, and generally out of sorts, and want to brace up. Brace up, but not with stimulants, spring medicines, or bitters, which have for their basis very cheap, bad whisky, and which stimulate you for an hour, and then leave you in worse condition than before. What you want is an alterative that will purify your blood, start healthy action of Liver and Kidneys, restore your vitality, and give renewed health and strength. Such a medicine you will find in Electric Bitters, at only 50 cents a bottle at LeGro and Lynde's Drug Store. 3

THEIR BUSINESS BOOMING.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted. 3 let that cold of yours run on. You think it is a light thing. But it may run into catarrh. Or into pneumonia. Or consumption.

DON'T

Catarrh is disgusting. Pneumonia is dangerous. Consumption is death itself.

The breathing apparatus must be kept clear of all obstructions and offensive matter. Otherwise there is trouble ahead.

All the diseases of these parts, head, nose, throat, bronchial tubes and lungs, can be delightfully and entirely cured by the use of Boschee's German Syrup. If you don't know this already, thousands and thousands of people can tell you. They have been cured by it, and "know how it is themselves." Bottle only 75 cents. Ask any druggist. 2

Harper's Bazar.

ILLUSTRATED.

Harper's Bazar is a home journal. It combines choice literature and fine art illustrations with the latest intelligence regarding the fashions. Each number has clever serial and short stories, practical and timely essays, bright poems, humorous sketches, etc. Its pattern-sheet and fashion-plate supplements will alone help ladies to save many times the cost of the subscription, and papers on social etiquette, decorative art, house-keeping in all its branches, cookery, etc., make it useful in every household, and a true promoter of economy. Its editorials are marked by good sense, and not a line is admitted to its columns that could offend the most fastidious taste.

The News and the Truth

—IN THE—

Springfield Republican.

The Springfield Republican, established in 1824 by Samuel Bowles, is universally recognized as one of the leading newspapers in America. It publishes the most thorough and comprehensive reports of New England news, and ably represents the best New England ideas. It is particularly energetic in collecting the local news of Western Massachusetts and the neighboring parts of other states, Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire, and presents a full daily record of the life of this region such as can be found in no other paper.

It is vigorous, but reasonable in the expression of its editorial opinions, which are progressive, independent and liberal. It is devoted to the interests of the whole people rather than to those of any party. Recognizing the good and condemning the evil represented in the chief political bodies as now constituted, it gives its support to the side that offers the largest measure of advancement toward better, purer government and happier, more equitable social conditions.

It deals with all the vital issues of the day and offers its readers abundant and interesting examples of good literature.

The Daily Republican is sold for $8 a year, $2 a quarter, 70 cents a month, 3 cents a copy.

The Sunday Republican is $2 a year, 50 cents a quarter, 5 cents a copy.

The Weekly Republican is $1 a year, 60 cents for 6 months; 10 cents a month for trial subscriptions.

An Extraordinary Offer!

Two Weekly Papers

ONE YEAR FOR $1.25.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLICAN, a superior, carefully edited news and family journal, and THE FARM AND FIRESIDE, a popular story and agricultural weekly published by the Toronto (Canada) Mail will both be sent to any address one year for $1.25.

New subscriptions to the Weekly Republican for 1888 may date from December 1, 1887.

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES of the Superior Court now sitting in Springfield within and for the County of Hampden.

Respectfully represent the inhabitants of Palmer, a municipal corporation in said county, that on Monday, the 26th day of September, last, in legal town meeting assembled, they voted to adopt certain by-laws for said town, and their action was as follows; the warrant for said meeting contained among others the following, viz:

Article 4. To see if the town will make any order or by-law regarding preserving the peace and good order of the town and maintaining the internal police thereof, particularly the dispersing of crowds from the sidewalks of the several villages of town.

Acting under said article it was voted to adopt the following by-laws:

SECTION 1. No person shall put or place or cause to be put or placed in any street, lane or alley, or other public place in the town, any house dirt, ashes, filth, shells or other kinds of rubbish.

SEC. 2. No person shall behave himself in a rude or disorderly manner, or use any indecent or profane language in any street, lane, alley or other public place in the town.

SEC. 3. No person shall swim or bathe in any pond, stream or river in the town, divested of clothing, so as to be indecently exposed to the view of any person lawfully passing or being in or upon any street, lane, alley, common, square, railroad or other public place within the town.

SEC. 4. Three or more persons shall not stand together or near each other in any street or on any footwalk or sidewalk in the town, so as to obstruct the free passage for foot passengers, any person or persons, so standing, shall move on immediately after a request, so to do made by either of the selectmen, or any constable, public officer or watchman.

SEC. 5. No person shall be or remain upon the steps of or other projection from any church, hotel, hall or other public building, nor in any hall, space or way leading thereto, so as to incommode or obstruct the passage to and from such church, hall, hotel or building, and every person so being or remaining, when ordered by either of the selectmen, or any constable, police officer, watchman, owner, agent or other person having charge of said church, hotel, hall or other public building, shall immediately depart therefrom.

SEC. 6. Whoever shall offend against or fail to comply with any of the provisions of this ordinance, shall for each and every offence forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than two nor more than twenty dollars.

SEC. 7. No person shall be prosecuted for any offense against any of the provisions of this ordinance unless complaint for the same shall be instituted and commenced within six months from the time of committing such offense.

SEC. 8. The constables and all police officers and watchmen are especially charged to see that the provisions of this ordinance are enforced.

It was also voted: That the selectmen be a committee to present these by-laws to a proper court for their approval.

And said inhabitants pray that said by-laws may be approved by this court to the end that the wishes and intentions of said inhabitants may be carried into effect.

Palmer, Mass., October 26th, A. D., 1887.
By their Attorney,
C. L. GARDNER,

Palmer, Mass., October 26th, 1887.

I hereby certify that at a meeting of the inhabitants of Palmer, duly warned and held on Monday, the 26th day of September, last, the above mentioned by-laws were adopted, as stated in above petition, and that the article of the warrant under which said action was taken, and the votes passed by said inhabitants are fully and accurately stated and are identical with the records of said meeting now in my possession as clerk of said town, so far as said records relate to said by-laws.

SILK DEPARTMENT.

We Have Just Made

A large and Important Purchase of Black Silks a much under the cost of manufacture. Made by the best manufacturer in the country, every yard warranted to give satisfaction.

Lot 1, 80c, never sold before under $1.
Lot 2, 87½c, never sold before under $1.25.
Lot 3, $1.12½, never sold before under $1.50.
Lot 4, $1.25, never sold before under $1.75.

A Great Many People May Wonder

How we can sell Staple Goods like Black Silks so much under value. The facts are these. Black Silks the past year or so have been very slow sale all over the country, and manufacturers have accumulated large stocks on their hands.

50 pieces Fancy Velvets at 36c, sold last spring a $1 per yard.

40 pieces 18-inch Silk Plushes at 50c, sold last month at $1.

When the above lot is sold the price will be $1 again. We could sell the entire lot in New York for 75c. We have MADE the PRICE 50c.

To our retail customers, and will hold the lot for their benefit.

A gentleman from New York called on us last week representing a velvet and plush manufacturer in Crefeld, Ger., where most of the large velvet manufacturers have their factories. Said he did not understand how we could sell goods at the Prices we had them Marked.

He purchased 10 yards of the fancy striped at 36c, to show his house what was being done in Springfield. He said the goods would not last two hours if we had them in New York. We are always glad to be able to

Place Such BARGAINS

I Bide My Time.

I bide my time. Whenever shadows darken
Along my path, I do but lift mine eyes,
And faith reveals fair showers beyond the skies.
And through earth's harsh, discordant sounds I hearken
And hear divinest music from afar,
Sweet sounds from lands where half my loved ones are.
I bide—I bide my time.

I bide my time. Whatever woes assail me
I know the strife is only for a day;
A Friend waits for me farther on the way—
A Friend too faithful and too true to fail me,
Who will bid all life's jarring turmoil cease
And lead me to the realms of perfect peace.
I bide—I bide my time.

I bide my time. This conflict and resistance,
This drop of rapture in a cup of pain,
This wear and tear of body and of brain
But fits my spirit for the new existence
Which waits me in the happy by-and-by.
I bide—I bide my time.

A PROMPT SOLUTION.

It was a typical country store. There were soap and pins, and needles and letter-paper, and back-combs and paper collars, and suspenders, in glass cases in the front, and crockery and calico, and tinware, and overalls, and cowhide boots, disposed on the shelves, and butter and dried beef, and buckwheat and kerosene, and molasses and codfish in friendly confusion in the rear. Its motley variety was indeed a necessity. Lamphier's was the only store at Unionville.

But if Lamphier's was the typical country store, Lottie Lamphier was not the typical country storekeeper's daughter. So John Stockman, Mr. Lamphier's clerk from the next town, had thought, when he first saw her tripping into the store one morning, after a spool of thread and a pound of coffee—she was her father's housekeeper.

She had seemed to John, in her crisp pink calico and her natty straw hat, the most jauntily-stylish girl he had ever seen, as well as the prettiest.

That was four months ago. Lottie came down to the store frequently. Of course, it was a necessity that she should; something was always needed at the house. Certainly John was far too modest to dream that his presence could have the remotest influence on her comings or goings.

But he had not neglected his opportunities. He had talked to her as he tied up her sugar or rolled up her lining-cambric, and smiled at her from over the kerosene can and the molasses barrel; and Lottie had not been prudishly backward in responding. The first snow found them very good friends indeed.

The one blot on this extremely pleasant companionship was Mr. Lamphier. Whether Mr. Lamphier was guilty of the notion that his clerk was an undesirable parti, and therefore an dangerous companion for his daughter; or whether he was possessed of an ignoble fear of the loss of a good housekeeper; or whether he had merely developed a streak of unreason an contrariness, not entirely unknown in elderly gentlemen who are undergoing their first touches of rheumatism, and feeling the need of an older pair of glasses—what Mr. Lamphier's motive was is doubtful.

But he was plainly opposed to John Stockman's growing admiration for his pretty daughter.

The scene which took place one snowy December morning had come to be a common one.

Lottie came down to the store at a quarter to nine. It was earlier than she generally came, and the fact accounted for the blackness of Mr. Lamphier's frown.

Her new brown dress was extraordinarily stylish and becoming, and John Stockman fairly blushed with delighted admiration at the sight of her.

Lottie had nothing to get but a pound of rice, and it was impossible to be very long about getting that. But Lottie was a young person of ways and means.

"Good-morning, Mr. Stockman," she called out, cheerfully.

John was replenishing the fire at the back of the store.

"Good-morning, Miss Lamphier," he replied with subdued enthusiasm.

Mr. Lamphier's sharp eyes were upon him, and he did not venture to join her.

"What are these, pa?" cried Lottie, immediately. "Do come and show me how they work, Mr. Stockman."

They were patent mouse-traps. It was improbable that Lottie was ignorant of their function, or that John Stockman believed that she was; but he got himself to the front of the store with alacrity.

"It's lovely weather, Mr. Stockman," Lottie observed, forgetting the mouse-trap. "Elegant!"

"Is it?" said John, not brilliantly, but devotedly, looking his admiration of Lottie's bright eyes and cheeks.

"Oh, yes; the snow's a foot deep, and I have to wade; but I like it."

"Do you like walking alone—by yourself?" John ventured.

"Oh, well, I suppose it would be pleasanter with somebody along," Lottie responded, with her eyes on a row of stove polish boxes.

"I should say so, decidedly," said John, growing bolder.

"Stockman!" Mr. Lamphier called, snappishly, "please attend to customers."

The 'customers' consisted of old Billy Murdock, who came in regularly to sit over the stove, but never bought anything, but John went back obediently.

There was a period of silence, and then a clatter from the front.

"Oh, goodness!" cried Lottie, in a tone of horror. "I've knocked down a box of curtain-fixtures. Mercy! do help me to pick them up!"

John rushed to her side. He did not know whether she had knocked them off purposely, though he hoped she had. Lottie knew; but she looked quite innocently regretful.

They groped about together for the missing curtain-fixtures, among the empty boxes under the counter. Occasionally their hands touched each other.

"We will never find them all," said Lottie.

"I hope we won't. I'm willing to keep hunting," said John, with a shy, sly glance at the pretty face beside him.

"I've got lots of things to do at home," said Lottie, smiling back at him. "I am trimming a new hat—"

"You couldn't improve on that one," John put in, with another admiring glance.

"And if I'm going to have rice pudding for dinner it ought to be on," said Lottie, musingly.

But she kept on feeling aimlessly about for the fixtures.

"I'd be glad to walk home with you if my time were my own," said John, willfully.

"You've never been to the house, have you?" Lottie queried.

"You've never invited me," John responded with gentle reproach. "Not that I'd come if you did," he added, with a fait motion of his head toward Mr. Lamphier.

Lottie sighed.

"If you could get an evening off," she suggested, timidly. "Pa isn't home till half-past ten or so, and—"

John turned a radiantly-grateful face upon her.

"You know I'd be delighted, Miss Lamphier," he almost gasped. "I'd—"

"Stockman!" Mr. Lamphier's voice was alarmingly near. "I want that box of spices opened immediately."

Mr. Lamphier's head projected itself over the counter, and he glared down at the startled pair beneath him.

"John looked at Lottie. There was a daring light in his eyes.

"I'll come this evening."

"He formed the words inaudibly with his lips, and hurried away.

Mr. Lamphier slapped the package of rice on the counter, frowningly.

Lottie brushed off her dress, readjusted her veil, extracted a piece of citron from a jar and nibbled at it, and went out, with a parting smile for John Stockman.

If Lottie put on her best dress and prettiest ruchings, and her silver hair-pin and bracelets, that evening, after her father had eaten his supper and gone back to the store; and if somebody knocked at the kitchen-door about eight; and if the kitchen resounded for two hours thereafter with pleasant chat, and harmless badinage, and light-hearted laughter—if these things occured, surely it was nobody's business.

"I don't need to tell you how I have enjoyed the evening, Miss Lamphier," said John Stockman, earnestly, as he rose at last, lingeringly. "I know I shouldn't have come; but I—couldn't help it and I can't be sorry I did."

"Certainly not," said Lottie, with pretty warmth.

"I should like to come again." John pursued; "but of course this isn't the way—"

"I don't care—so now!" said Lottie, stoutly. "If pa will be so unreasonable, I don't know what else we can— Goodness! what is that, Mr. Stockman?"

She sniffed the air apprehensively.

John sniffed, too.

"It's smoke!" he declared.

"Mercy! where?" cried Lottie.

"We'll have to investigate," said John, taking up the lamp.

They went into the back entry. It was blue with smoke. Lottie gave a little scream.

"Something's afire," said John Stockman. "Don't be alarmed, Miss Lamphier," he added, solicitously.

He opened the wood-house door. They were choked by a rush of smoke and hot air. Their startled gaze revealed one side of the wood-house alive with licking, darting flames.

John Stockman's practical mind worked quickly.

"Where's the sink, Miss Lamphier?" he demanded; "and a water-pail? Two if possible. We'll have to work to stop it. It's got a good start."

They did work. They rushed to and fro with heavy pails of water, half blinded by the smoke, hot from the flames, dripping from spilled water.

At the end of a confused fifteen minutes they sat down, exhausted and dizzy, in the doorway, and surveyed the scene.

One wall of the wood-house was burned black, and at one point the flames had burst through, and the moonlight came streaming in.

It shone on the recumbent form of a red-faced, blowsy and obviously inebriated tramp, sleeping peacefully on a pile of kindling-wood. It shone on a dirty clay pipe thrust into a little mound of shavings, which still smouldered. It shone, furthermore, on Mr. Lamphier, standing in the wood-house door and staring in.

Lottie was more than equal to the occasion. She was not the person to let a golden opportunity escape her.

She rushed over to her father and clasped both hands around his arm, with a tragic little shriek.

"Oh, pa," she cried, "just look! Just think what you've escaped! The house would have been burned down in another minute—in one more minute—all burned down! Mr. Stockman has saved it. If he hadn't been here, and we hadn't smelled smoke and come out here, found the wood-house all ablaze, and worked like anything to put it out, just think what would have happened! It was that horrid tramp. He'd got in here somehow and gone to sleep smoking, and his horrid pipe set things afire. I'm so glad Mr. Stockman was here—ain't you, pa, dear?"

Mr. Lamphier looked at his daughter and at John Stockman, and at the blackened wall, and then at the serenely slumbering tramp.

"Ah, yes!" he responded. "It was fortunate you happened along, Stockman."

There was a tinge of irony in his tone, and some grimness in his smile; but Lottie did not mind that—nor did John Stockman.

They realized that, by a fortunate turn of events, Mr. Lamphier was defeated, and made to appreciate and admit the fact.

They cared little for the burned beams; they were not conscious of their dripping clothes; the slumbering tramp seemed an angel in disguise.

"Well, its the way to do," Lottie declared, a few weeks later, when she and John Stockman were safely engaged and Mr. Lamphier had given them his blessing, and intimated that he'd thought of taking a partner, and that John might do—"it's the way to do. If we'd just stood back as meek as mice, and waited for pa to come round and invite you up to the house—Mercy! I can't bear to think of it!"

HOW CAN WE DRAW IN THE POOR?

That is almost the only religious question worth asking nowadays. That is what bothers and interests every religious convention. Every church and every minister must answer it for themselves; but the answer must be found, or the work is proved a failure. Anything is better than nothing. Real earnestness and hearty sympathy will find the answer somehow. The poor have human hearts like the rich or middle classes. They have hopes, aspirations, religious impulses. They have pride. The man who is in earnest to reach them will get them. He must prove that he loves them, and that his interest in their welfare is genuine. There is no mechanical way of drawing in the poor, and for that reason the methods cannot be laid down for some one else to follow. Chief of all is the interest the church or preacher must have in the poor. Any mounte bank of a theorist who really cares for the poor, no matter how foolish his panacea, can find a crowd to follow him. What keeps the poor away is, more than anything else, a proud, pharisaical heart, which says, "I am better than thou." It says too often, "I was poor like you, and I became rich and increased in goods, because I was better and more clever or industrious than you. I could rise, and if you don't, it's your own fault. I have no sympathy with your laziness, you unthrift and your vice. I do not want your company. I have left it; and now keep by yourself and I will by myself." Does the church ever seem to talk so to the poor? If so, it is no wonder that it does not draw them.—Independent.

A LESSON IN DISCIPLINE.

On the train crossing the Rocky Mountains I heard a teamster tell about a mother bear and her cub, giving a good example to human mothers in family government. This man was going up the mountain for pine logs, driving a wagon. On the top of a large rock by the side of the road was a young bear, the mother having started up the mountain on the approach of the team. "The cub looked so cute," said the teamster, "lying there with its paws dropped over the edge of the rock, watching the horses as they came up. Presently the old bear came bounding back to the cub, and, giving it a nudge with her nose, started up the mountain again, expecting the 'young one' to follow. But the cub made no move. The old bear then came back the second time, and taking up the cub in her arms, gave him several cuffs. This time the cub obeyed orders and followed the old bear in a gallop up the side of the mountain."

PAT ON THE ROAD.

An Irishman, driven to desperation by the stringency of the money market and the high price of provisions, procured a pistol and took to the road. Meeting a traveler, he stopped him with:

"Your money or your life!"

Seeing Pat was green at the business, the traveler said:

"I'll tell you what I'll do; I'll give you all my money for that pistol."

"Agreed."

Pat received the money and handed over the pistol.

"Now," said the traveler, "hand back that money or I'll blow your brains out!"

"Blaze away, me hearty," said Pat, "never a dhrop of powder is there in it?"

THE BONES OF COLUMBUS.

The bones of the discoverer of America are to be once more removed, as if they had not yet earned rest. When Columbus died he first found a resting place at Valladolid. But it was not for long. In seven years his remains were taken to Seville and in 1536 across the ocean to Hati, where they were deposited in the cathedral of San Domingo. In 1795 it was thought to be high time that the bones of Columbus were disturbed again, and they were taken to Havana, Cuba. Now after a further rest of a hundred years, a fresh transfer—let us hope the last—is to be made, and Genoa, the navigator's birthplace, will claim its own.—Chicago Times.

Archdeacon Farrar says that Cruikshank, the artist, offered $500 for proof of a violent crime committed by a total abstainer from intoxicants, and that the money remains unclaimed to-day. The archdeacon says that he will give the same amount for proof of any one case, "either in church or out of it, where drunkenness has been cured without total abstinence."

In 1850 Chicago had less than 30,000 people, Philadelphia 340,000 and New York 515,000; in 1880 Chicago had 503,000, Philadelphia 847,000 and New York 1,206,000. In other words Chicago, notwithstanding its enormous growth, had not added as many thousand as either of the older cities.

The raspberry jam of commerce contains almost anything but raspberries, just as the civil service reform of this administration contains almost anything but reform.—Lowell Courier.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 9, 1887.

THE last spike in the Central Massachusetts Railroad was driven yesterday afternoon at Northampton.

CHICAGO has been selected as the place, and June 19 the time, for holding the next Republican national convention.

THE president has done as expected in nominating Secretary Lamar for the supreme court, Postmaster General Vilas for secretary of the interior, and Don M. Dickinson for the post office department.

THE United States supreme court has rendered an important decision on state rights, holding that a state cannot be sued or coerced in the federal courts. The cour also affirmed he validity of the Kansas prohibition law.

SEVENTEEN Massachusetts cities held their elections Tuesday, and nine of them voted for no license. Springfield returned to the license column by a majority of 1185 votes, and Mayor Maynard was re-elected by a majority of 637. Holyoke elected James E. Delaney for mayor, and Northampton re-elected Mayor Hill. Both cities voted for license.

MR. BLAINE was promptly interviewed at Paris Wednesday as to his views on President Cleveland's message, and of course takes quite decided exceptions to it as a free trade manifesto. As a thorough protectionist Mr. Blaine would reduce the revenue by repealing the tobacco tax and making some change in the tariff, and would use a moderate sum annually in fortifying our sea-coast.

Both political parties were pledged to tariff reform in 1884, as now advocated so strongly by President Cleveland. Here is what the platform of the Republican party said:—

The Democratic party has failed completely to relieve the p ople of the burden of unnecessary taxation by a wise reduction of the surplus. The Republican party pledges itself to correct the irregularities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus.

The Democrats were not far behind, for they declared:—

That change is necessary is proved by an existing surplus of more than $100,000,000, which has yearly been collected from a suffering people. Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation. . . . The Democratic party is pledged to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests.

A NOTABLE MESSAGE.

The message which President Cleveland sent to Congress Tuesday was the greatest surprise that body has had in a long time, and has created a decided sensation throughout the country. It is in marked contrast with the traditional lengthy and rambling message, being short and pointed, devoted entirely to one issue of paramount importance,—the surplus, and what to do with it. He attacks the subject vigorously in his opening sentence:

"You are confronted at the threshold of your legislative duties with a condition of the national finances which imperatively demands immediate and careful consideration. The amount of money annually exacted through the operation of present laws from the industries and necessities of the people largely exceeds the sum necessary to meet the expenses of the government."

From this text the president goes on to show that "the theory of our institutions guarantees to every citizen the full enjoyment of all the fruits of his industry;" that to collect a larger exaction of those fruits than is necessary "is indefensible extortion and a culpable betrayal of American fairness and justice," that this wrong "multiplies a brood of evil consequences" by "crippling our national energies, suspending our country's development, preventing investment in productive enterprise, threatening financial disturbances and inventing schemes of public plunder." Figures giving the state of the surplus and showing its unprecedented increase follow, and the difficulty of dealing with it under present laws is amply stated. The authority to affect the business of the country by its control, sometimes used by the secretary of the treasury, is pointed out as dangerous. The objections to depending upon the purchase of bonds for its disposal are given, as are those which exist to several other plans suggested. Extravagant appropriations as a means of disposing of it are condemned, and finally, the responsibility of Congress to provide a relief from the dangers that exist is pointedly urged.

The president then proceeds to say that the only rational and safe way to deal with the surplus is to remove the cause of its creation by cutting off taxation. "Our present tariff laws, the vicious, inequitable and illogical source of unnecessary taxation ought to be at once revised and amended." This is emphatic and also true. The internal revenue duties are, he says, levied not on necessaries but on luxuries, and may well be left alone. The reduction of revenue ought to come from the custom duties now levied on upwards of 8000 articles. Many of these, the president urges, should be relieved from import duties, and he suggests that raw materials used in manufactures should figure largely in the extended free list. This should, as he points out, benefit the manufacturer and afford him a better chance to successfully compete with foreign rivals. While discussing this matter he touches the sensitive point of the protected laborer's wages in a way that must excite universal attention. He shows by the figures of the last census that 17,392,099 of our population were engaged "in all kinds of industries, of whom 7,670,493 are employed in agriculture, 4,074,238 in professional and personal service (2,934,976 of whom are domestic servants and laborers), while 1,810,236 are employed in trade and transportation, and 3,837,112 are classed as employed in manufacturing and mining." And of this last named group only 2,628,089 persons were "employed in such manufacturing industries as are claimed to be benefited by a high tariff." After citing these cogent statistics he reasons that while no citizen's interests should be unnecessarily oppressed, the sixteen million laborers who are not protected by tariff should be regarded fully as much as the two millions who are protected, especially as these two millions are also forced to pay back as consumers the bonus they exact as producers.

The president calls attention to the fact that healthy manufacturing competion "is too often strangled by combinations, quite prevalent at this time, and frequently called 'Trusts.'" He admits the difficulties of tariff reform, but reminds Congress that both parties are pledged to the correction of existing evils, and adds, "Our progress toward a wise conclusion will not be improved by dwelling upon the theories of protection and free trade. This savors too much of bandying epithets. It is a condition which confronts us, not a theory."

It is a grave problem which the president would have Congress solve, in meeting the present difficulty without creating a greater one. The American workingman to-day lives more comfortably and earns more wages, with which he can buy more, probably, than his fellow laborers in any other nation on the globe, and it remains to be seen how much better off he would be under a low tariff.

Rice; collector, G. C. Ellis; guide, F. N. Harrison; chaplain, Rev. F. W. Betts; warden, D. H. Brown; sentry, E. L. Davis; trustees, F. F. Marcy, H. E. W. Clark, P. E. Miller; representative to grand council, Fred Allen; alternate, S. W. French. The council is in an exceedingly prosperous condition, and receives new members at nearly every meeting.

The Young people's society of Christian Endeavor at the Congregational church will observe its first anniversary next Sunday evening. The society has had a very prosperous year indeed, its growth in numbers and efficiency having exceeded the expectations of its most sanguine friends. Its aim has been to promote an earnest Christian life among its members, and to win as many as possible to the service of Christ. It numbers to-day over 100 members, 88 being active members. An elaborate programme has been prepared, which with the assistance of the choir, will furnish an evening of exceeding interest. The services will begin at 7 o'clock, and all are cordially invited.

At the probate court held in Springfield Wednesday, John W. Palmer and Catherine Power were appointed administrators of the estate of Michael Power, late of Wilbraham, Rufus Chandler of the estate of Anna Fenton Chandler, late of Monson. The will of Louisa S. Whitcomb, late of Palmer, was approved, Newton S. Hubbard executor; also the will of Alfred Wallace, late of Monson, Rose P. Wallace executrix. Accounts were rendered by: Solomon F. Cushman, executor of the estate of Lucinda K. Packard, late of Monson; Edward F. Morris, trustee under the will of Joseph L. Reynolds, late of Monson; A. L. Converse and Henry S Lee, guardians of Lydia L. and Mary F. Wyles, minors, of Brimfield; Laura Nelson, executrix of the will of William Nelson, late of Wales.

The adjourned base ball meeting was held in the district court room Tuesday evening at 7 30 o'clock, with a small attendance. The business interests of the village were very poorly represented, owing to the fact that the attention of many of the citizens was directed elsewhere. However, those present managed to transact some minor business and also to draw up a paper containing the signatures of those who would be most likely to become members of the association to be formed. It is proposed to circulate the paper as soon as possible, to obtain the necessary funds to float the team. Another meeting will be held later, when matters pertaining to the formation of a team will be discussed. The sum of $150 which the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society demands for the use of its park next season, is considered very high, and it is feared will have a tendency to cast a shadow over the plans already made.

The creelers in the employ of the Palmer Carpet Company struck Friday and have not as yet resumed work. The grievance now pending is owing to the fact that the new management, when it assumed control, reduced the wages of the creelers from 80 to 40 cents per day, by allowing each creeler but one loom to supply with creeling. Both the company and the strikers are determined to adhere to their previous statements regarding the price-list, and a as result the company have declined to allow the strickers to resume work at any price whatever, and have secured new help in some instances to take the places made vacant. It is said the general reduction which has been made will cause some of the operatives now at work to strike for an increase unless the company decides to go back to the old price-list again. Those said to be working under the greatest reduction are the winders, who claim that the pay received is insufficient to support them. At the annual meeting of the company next Monday the matter will be considered and possibly adjusted satisfactorily to all parties involved.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society was held at the Weeks House hall Monday with a good attendance. Dr. William Holbrook occupied the chair and after the transaction of some preliminary matters the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Dr. William Holbrook of Palmer; vice presidents, W. M. Tucker of Monson and J. F. Holbrook of Palmer; board of directors, A. P. Capen of Ludlow, D. R. McCray of Hampden, J. M. Lyons of Wales, J. S. Keep of Monson, F. E. Kinney of Holland, O. D. Wells of Brimfield and J. K. Knox of Palmer; delegate to the State Board of Agriculture meetings for two years, Dr. William Holbrook of Palmer. The report of the secretary and treasurer showed the society to be in a comparatively good financial condition, considering the numerous bills of expense that it has encountered during the past year. The present indebtedness is $1110, due to the fact that a new covered grand stand was erected the past year, while the net receipts of the last annual fair were $300. The amount expended the past year was $2670, while the amount received was $2970. The entire property of the society is valued at $10,000. After voting to charge the proposed base ball association $150 for the forthcoming season, it was decided to hold three farmers' institutes at the Weeks House hall on the first Tuesdays of January, February and March.

DEATH OF MRS. HARRIET RUGGLES.

Mrs. Harriet Ruggles, wife of Dr. Silas Ruggles, died at her home Sunday morning at 4 45. Though she has been in poor health for several years, the news of her death was a shock to her many friends and relatives. Mrs. Ruggles had been a resident of this village fourteen years, and during this time had made many friends by whom she will be much missed. She was thoroughly devoted to the interests of her family. A loyal, wise, true helpmeet, a firm, affectionate mother and a true friend. In early life she became a member of the M. E. church, and her life work has been in the blessed spirit of the Master. The funeral services were held at the Baptist church Tuesday afternoon, Rev. F. B. Joy of East Longmeadow officiating. Mrs. F. C. Hatch presided at the organ, and the singers were Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Huntley and Mr. Ely of St. Paul's choir and Mr. Miller of the Congregational choir of Palmer. A large number of friends and neighbors were present to show their affection for the deceased and their sympathy for the bereaved family. The floral emblems were numerous and tasteful, among them being a pillow inscribed "Mother," a beautiful cross in relief, and many cut flowers. Mrs. Ruggles leaves a husband, two sons and a daughter, also a mother, brother and sister.

A WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Sixty years is a long time to look forward to, but seems a brief span when viewed in the retrospect. And so it seemed to the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Ramsdell, as they gathered last Friday afternoon to tender congratulations to them on their having reached their 60th wedding anniversary. An informal reception was held from four until eight. The house was beautifully decorated with potted plants, flowers and smilax, and refreshments were served in the dining rooms, where lady friends who presided at the table felt it to be an especial honor to assist at such an unusual occasion. It was an event much enjoyed by all the guests, especially by the older ones, who were heartily glad to rejoice with these kind friends and neighbors who for so many years had shared their joys and sorrows. Gifts of flowers and other tokens were sent in as reminders of the occasion, and their old neighbors presented them with a French clock, hoping that its melodious chime might be an oft-repeated echo of those wedding bells that had pealed for them so long ago, and wishing that it may call out the hours of many more anniversaries. Mr. Ramsdell is a native of Warren, born in 1800, and has always been indentified with its interests, having served in nearly all its offices. Mrs. Ramsdell was born in Hanover, Mass. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Eels, and she was a lineal descendant of John Alden. Mr. Ramsdell married her at her native place, and on their arrival in Warren a wedding party was given them. Mrs. Asa Patrick was present at the anniversary to renew her congratulations, which were given at the wedding party sixty years ago. The anniversary was arranged by their daughters, and was a complete surprise. Providence has seemed especially kind in preserving this family circle unbroken—Mrs. Frank Kingman and son and daughter, Miss Susie Kingman and Mr. Joseph Kingman of the law firm of Woods, Mahn & Kingman, of Minneapolis, Minn., Mrs. Aaron King and daughter, Miss Anna King of Nashua, N. H., and Mrs. George Shumway and son Alfred. One grandchild, son of Mrs. King, waits to greet them in the "home above." Mr. and Mrs. Ramsdell make their home now with Mr. and Mrs. Shumway, who strive by their kindly care to make the years of their setting sun the brightest and most beautiful of their life.

In 1838 Mr. Blood entered the employ of Avery Clark, as clerk in his straw shop in the building which now stands corner of Water and South streets, which then

I have been a sufferer from catarrh for the past eight years. Having tried a number of remedies advertised as "sure cures" without obtaining any relief, I had resolved never to take any other patent medicines, when a friend advised me to try Ely's Cream Balm. I did so with great reluctance, but can now testify with pleasure that after using it for six weeks I believe myself cured. It is a most agreeable remedy—an invaluable Balm.—Joseph Stewart, 624 Grand Ave., Brooklyn. 2w36

A Certainty.

Steele's Little Bile Pills are without an equal for stimulating the liver to healthy action, and creating a proper secretion of bile, thus removing from the system the germs of malaria, curing constipation, indigestion, and inducing a healthy circulation of the blood, without which no one can enjoy sound health. They are small, but effective; free from nauseating propensities and griping pains, and do not interfere in their action with the ordinary routine of daily life. Heavily sugar coated. To be had of LeGro & Lynde, for 25 cents per bottle. lyscow

RENEWS HER YOUTH.

Mrs. Phoebe Besley, Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 75 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." Try a bottle, 50c. and $1, at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 4

WORTH KNOWING.

Mr. W. H. Morgan, merchant, Lake City, Fla., was taken with a severe Cold, attended with a distressing Cough and running into Consumption in its first stages. He tried many so-called popular cough remedies and steadily grew worse. Was reduced in flesh, had difficulty in breathing and was unable to sleep. Finally tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and found immediate relief, and after using about half a dozen bottles found himself well and has had no return of the disease. No other remedy can show so grand a record of cures, as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption Guaranteed to do just what is claimed for it.—Trial bottles free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 4

Some Things Learned by Experience.

That a tablespoonful of salt thrown on a coal fire that is low, will cause it to burn up quickly. That you can clean oil cloth with milk and water; while soap and brush will ruin it. That the skin of a boiled egg is the best remedy you can apply to a boil. That you can't cure Rheumatism or Neuralgia without taking Menard's Rheumatic Bullets. That you can buy them of LeGro & Lynde for $1 00 per bottle. cow7

WHAT AM I TO DO?

The symptoms of Biliousness are unhapoily too well known. They differ in different individuals to some extent. A bilious man is seldom a breakfast eater. To frequently, alas, he has an excellent appetite for liquids but none for solids of a morning. His tongue will hardly bear inspection at any time; if it is not white and furred, it is rough, at all events.

The digestive system is wholly out of order and Diarrhœa or Constipation may be a symptom or they may alternate. There are often Hemorrhoids or even loss of blood. There may be giddiness and often headache and acidity or flatulence and tenderness in the pit of the stomach. To correct all this if not effect a cure try Green's August Flower, it costs but a trifle and thousands attest its efficacy. 1

Boston Weekly Journal.

ESTABLISHED 1833.

The Presidential Year.

ONLY ONE DOLLAR A YEAR (POSTAGE INCLUDED) FOR A STANDARD FAMILY PAPER.

A FIRST-CLASS NEWSPAPER FOR HOME READING.

For the year ending 1888 the Boston Weekly Journal promises to maintain the constantly-growing reputation achieved in the past as a genuine family paper for New England, worthy to enter every home; and for the fulfillment of this promise it points to its accomplished record as a voucher. Recently the price has been reduced, while the attractions have been decidedly enhanced. The Weekly Journal has been put at the very low rate of ONE DOLLAR per annum.

CLUB RATES.

None of the inducements for the getting up of clubs have been withdrawn in consequence of the lowered price:

Ten Copies, and one extra to the Organizer of a Club, $10

Twenty Copies and two extra to the Organizer of a Club, $20

One Copy for every Ten Subscribers.

In view of these rates and the value in reading matter which they represent, our readers have virtually the cheapest

New England Newspaper.

They have at this low cost a journal which is free from the sensational and untrustworthy characteristics that make so many papers of the day unworthy of entrance to a home. At the same time they have an exemplar of the truth that a guidance of purity and sound principal is not incompatible with an engaging and vivacious presentation of news.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The Journal for 1888 will contain many new features. Several writers of acknowledged ability will contribute to its columns.

The Presidential Year.

The interest felt in the Presidential year will give to the volume for 1888 a peculiar interest. The progress of the campaign will be recorded from week to week. While the Journal is a Republican newspaper from the date of the party's organization, it gives the facts and developments of the campaign in a fair and impartial manner.

The election of 1888 will have an absorbing interest in political circles; and, in view of the wavering and misleading course which has been pursued by organs that claimed to be guides to public opinion in the past it will show a pressing need for one like the Journal, which has proved steadfast and able in its advocacy of the Republican principles.

The Anarchical, Industrial and Political problems and disturbances, both in the United States and in Europe, will also demand and receive intelligent attention as they arise during the year.

The Weekly edition is issued every Thursday morning.

Persons engaged in Commercial pursuits will find a paper of particular value in the BOSTON

Semi-Weekly Journal,

which is published on Tuesdays and Fridays, and contains the fullest Market, Commercial and Marine reports, besides a large amount of valuable reading matter of a miscellaneous character. It is a paper which no man actively engaged in trade and watching the course of commercial affairs can afford to be without.

Constitutional Cough Syrup

For Children.

BEDFORD, Sept. 20th, 1887.

MR. C. B. LITTLEFIELD.

Dear Sir:—I wish to say for the benefit of those who are troubled with coughs and colds that they will find a sure cure in the Constitutional Cough Syrup. I have a family of nine children, from three to twenty-one years old, and all have used the Syrup for coughs and colds, and it has never failed to cure them. It is the best cough syrup for children I ever knew, as I have never had to employ a doctor for these diseases, but have cured them with the Constitutional Cough Syrup.

The News and the Truth

—IN THE—

Springfield Republican.

The Springfield Republican, established in 1824 by Samuel Bowles, is universally recognized as one of the leading newspapers in America. It publishes the most thorough and comprehensive reports of New England news, and ably represents the best New England ideas. It is particularly energetic in collecting the local news of Western Massachusetts and the neighboring parts of other states, Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire, and presents a full daily record of the life of this region such as can be found in no other paper.

It is vigorous, but reasonable in the expression of its editorial opinions, which are progressive, independent and liberal. It is devoted to the interests of the whole people rather than to those of any party. Recognizing the good and condemning the evil represented in the chief political bodies as now constituted, it gives its support to the side that offers the largest measure of advancement toward better, purer government and happier, more equitable social conditions.

It deals with all the vital issues of the day and offers its readers abundant and interesting examples of good literature.

The Daily Republican is sold for $8 a year, $2 a quarter, 70 cents a month, 3 cents a copy.

The Sunday Republican is $2 a year, 50 cents a quarter, 5 cents a copy.

The Weekly Republican is $1 a year, 60 cents for 6 months; 10 cents a month for trial subscriptions.

An Extraordinary Offer!

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES of the Superior Court now sitting in Springfield within and for the County of Hampden.

Respectfully represent the inhabitants of Palmer, a municipal corporation in said county, that on Monday, the 26th day of September, last, in legal town meeting assembled, they voted to adopt certain by-laws for said town, and their action was as follows; the warrant for said meeting contained among others the following, viz:

Article 4. To see if the town will make any order or by-law regarding preserving the peace and good order of the town and maintaining the internal police thereof, particularly the dispersing of crowds from the sidewalks of the several villages of town.

Acting under said article it was voted to adopt the following by-laws:

SECTION 1. No person shall put or place or cause to be put or placed in any street, lane or alley, or other public place in the town, any house dirt, ashes, filth, shells or other kinds of rubbish.

SEC. 2. No person shall behave himself in a rude or disorderly manner, or use any indecent or profane language in any street, lane, alley or other public place in the town.

SEC. 3. No person shall swim or bathe in any pond, stream or river in the town, divested of clothing, so as to be indecently exposed to the view of any person lawfully passing or being in or upon any street, lane, alley, common, square, railroad or other public place within the town.

SEC. 4. Three or more persons shall not stand together or near each other in any street or on any footwalk or sidewalk in the town, so as to obstruct the free passage for foot passengers, any person or persons, so standing, shall move on immediately after a request, so to do, made by either of the selectmen, or any constable, public officer or watchman.

SEC. 5. No person shall be or remain upon the steps of or other projection from any church, hotel, hall or other public building, nor in any hall, space or way leading thereto, so as to incommode or obstruct the passage to and from such church, hall, hotel or building, and every person so being or remaining, when ordered by either of the selectmen, or any constable, police officer, watchman, owner, agent or other person having charge of said church, hotel, hall or other public building, shall immediately depart therefrom.

SEC. 6. Whoever shall offend against or fail to comply with any of the provisions of this ordinance, shall for each and every offence forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than two nor more than twenty dollars.

SEC. 7. No person shall be prosecuted for any offense against any of the provisions of this ordinance unless complaint for the same shall be instituted and commenced within six months from the time of committing such offense.

SEC. 8. The constables and all police officers and watchmen are especially charged to see that the provisions of this ordinance are enforced.

It was also voted: That the selectmen be a committee to present these by-laws to a proper court for their approval.

And said inhabitants pray that said by-laws may be approved by this court to the end that the wishes and intentions of said inhabitants may be carried into effect.

Palmer, Mass., October 26th, A. D., 1887.
By their Attorney,
C. L. GARDNER,

Palmer, Mass., October 26th, 1887.

I hereby certify that at a meeting of the inhabitants of Palmer, duly warned and held on Monday, the 26th day of September, last, the above mentioned by-laws were adopted, as stated in above petition, and that the article of the warrant under which said action was taken, and the votes passed by said inhabitants are fully and accurately stated and are identical with the records of said meeting now in my possession as clerk of said town, so far as said records relate to said by-laws.

Very Wonderful

Are the effects produced by the use of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Sores, scabs, glandular swellngs, boils, carbuncles, and all kinds of humors disappear, as if by magic, by the use of this Standard Blood Purifier.

F. C. James of Albany, Greene Co., Tenn., writes: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla saved the life of my only child. When three years old her head was covered with scrofulous sores. She became almost helpless. Skillful physicians did all they could to help her, but failed. At last I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, gave it to her according to directions, and she immediately began to improve. Encouraged by the result, I continued to give her this medicine until the cure was complete."

SULPHUR BITTERS

THE BEST AND PUREST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

TRUTHS FOR THE SICK.

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those Pimples and Blotches which mar your beauty are caused by impure blood, and can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS.

What makes you tremble so? Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle, soothing DON'T tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. GIVE Sulphur Bitters is NOT a cheap rum or poor whisky drink, to be taken by the glass, like other preparations, which UP! stimulate only to destroy. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible headache? Why lay and toss on that bed of pain with rheumatism?

If you have failed to receive any benefit from other medicines or doctors, do not despair. Use Sulphur Bitters. They will cure you when all others fail. No person can remain long sick who uses SULPHUR BITTERS.

The dose is small—only a teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it, and you will be satisfied Get it of SULPHUR your druggist. Don't wait, get it at once. If you are suffering from Kidney Disease, and wish to live to old age, use Sulphur Bitters. They never fail to cure. BITTERS.

Send three 2-cent stamps to A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass., for best medical work published, finely illustrated with colored plates from life. 3

THIS is the season you suffer with chapped lips, hands, and rough, pimply skin. Hop Ointment is warranted to cure or no pay. Praised by all. All druggists sell it. Take no other. Sample free.

DR. SETH ARNOLD'S Cough Killer CURES COUGHS AND COLDS PREVENTS CONSUMPTION.

KEEP well, by having Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer in the house. It may save YOUR life. Health is everything, for once you get on the down track it will be apt to END UP in premature death. Druggists, 25c., 50c. and $1. Dr. Seth Arnold's Sugar-Coated Bilious Pills. 25c.

The Farmer.

Once on a time he used to plough
And rise at dawn to milk the cough,
And drive with merry song and laugh
To pasture Brindle and her caugh.

Then for the pigs he'd fill the trough,
And for the market h'd be ough;
Sometimes his mare would bruise her hough
Against a fence-post or a rough.

And then he'd switch her with a bough
To teach her better anyhough.
He planted wheat to make the dough,
Which, in drought, was hard to grough.

In winter, when his work was through,
A little sporting he would dough.
He'd wander with his gun and shough
And aim at crows he couldn't knough.

Sometimes he'd hunt along the slough
For birds that do not live there nough,
And shoot a seagull or a chough,
Which he with joy would proudly stough.

From swamp land, watered by a lough,
He made good pasture for his stough.
By laying here and there a sough,
While perspiration wet his brough.

Sometimes a snake that shed its slough
Would scare him so he'd run and pough
Till stuck knee-deep within a slough,
He'd yell until he raised a rough.

But rough work makes the farmer cough,
And, careless how much people scough,
He lives on boarders rough and tough,
Whough vough theigh dough not eat enough.

The Incurable Cured.

HOPKINSVILLE, KY., Feb. 24th, 1887.

Gentlemen—Seven years ago a sore developed on my nose from a finger nail scratch. I tried a few simple remedies, but the sore would not yield. I grew worse every year for seven years. Many thought I had a cancer. Over a year ago I commenced taking S. S. S., and two bottles entirely cured me. When I began with Swift's Specific I was in very poor health, and could hardly drag about. After I had finished the course of S. S. S. I was strong and buoyant, and had a good appetite. I regard it as a most valuable medicine for ladies in weak, delicate health. It is a household medicine with me. Yours respectfully,

MRS. R. W. WILSON.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., April 2, 1887.

Gentlemen—For twenty years I have had a sore on my left cheek. It had gradually been growing worse. The many physicians whom I had consulted were unable to do me any good. Last fall a year ago I began using S. S. S. At first it inflamed the sore, and it became more virulent than ever; so much so, indeed, that my family insisted that I should leave off the medicine. I persisted in using the S. S. S. At the end of two months the sore was entirely healed. Thinking that the evil was out of my constitution, I left off the medicine; but in November, ten months after, a very slight breaking out appeared. I at once began again on S. S. S., and now that is also disappearing. I have every faith in S. S. S. It has done me more good than all the doctors and other medicines I ever took.

Yours truly,

A. R. SHANDS.

WINSTON, N. C., April 12, 1887.

Gentlemen—Two or three years ago a cancer came on my face. It soon grew to be quite large. It wore on me, and my general health was very poor. Last September I began a course of S. S. S., which I have continued to the present time with the happiest result. The cancer has entirely disappeared, there being no evidence or symptom of a cancerous character left. My general health is good now, and my appetite better than it has been in years. I am 82 years old, and to-day I am working in the field planting corn. Yours truly,

JONAS LIMEBACH.

Gentlemen—I had a sore on my upper lip for eight years. Seven different doctors attempted in vain to heal it. One gave me a small vial for five dollars, which was a "certain cure." It is needless to say that it did me no good. About two years ago I became quite uneasy, as people thought I had a cancer, and I took a course of eighteen bottles of S. S. S. The result has been a complete cure. The ulcer or cancer healed beautifully, leaving scarcely a perceptible scar. From that day I have been in excellent health, the Specific having purified my blood thoroughly, increased my appetite and perfected my digestion. In a word, I feel like a new woman, and, best of all, the eight year ulcer is gone entirely. Yours sincerely,

Mrs. W. P. CANNON.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer as demonstrations of the unequalled excellency of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the greatest improvement in pianos in half a century. A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. The News and the Truth
Springfield Republican.

The Springfield Republican, established in 1824 by Samuel Bowles, is universally recognized as one of the leading newspapers in America. It publishes the most thorough and comprehensive reports of New England news, and ably represents the best New England ideas. It is particularly energetic in collecting the local news of Western Massachusetts and the neighboring parts of other states, Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire, and presents a full daily record of the life of this region such as can be found in no other paper.

It is vigorous, but reasonable in the expression of its editorial opinions, which are progressive, independent and liberal. It is devoted to the interests of the whole people rather than to those of any party. Recognizing the good and condemning the evil represented in the chief political bodies as now constituted, it gives its support to the side that offers the largest measure of advancement toward better, purer government and happier, more equitable social conditions.

It deals with all the vital issues of the day and offers its readers abundant and interesting examples of good literature.

The Daily Republican is sold for $8 a year, $2 a quarter, 70 cents a month, 3 cents a copy.

The Sunday Republican is $2 a year, 50 cents a quarter, 5 cents a copy.

The Weekly Republican is $1 a year, 60 cents for 6 months; 10 cents a month for trial subscriptions.

An Extraordinary Offer!

Two Weekly Papers
ONE YEAR FOR $1.25.

Testimony of Physicians.

The progressive and wide-a-wake physicians throughout the length and breadth of the land are awakening to a realization of the wonderful merits of Dr. R. C. Flower's Scientific Remedies, and are prescribing them with marvellously beneficial results. Below we give one of many similar interesting letters from wide-a-wake doctors.

DARLINGTON, PA., Jan. 29, 1887.

Dear Sir: I have been prescribing Dr. R. C. Flower's Liver and Stomach Sanative, Lung Cordial, Nerve Pills, Pain Destroying Elixir, Blood Purifier, and Magnetic Plasters, in my practice, with good results. They are splendid remedies.

W. A. SAWYER, M. D.

These medicines are the fruit of exhaustive scientific investigation, of thorough medical skill, and the long experience of the physician who today enjoys the most extensive practice of any physician in America. They are the best that science and skill has ever compounded.

Out at Sea.

I know that I'm dying, mate; so fetch the Bible here,
What's laid unopened in the chest for five and twenty year;
And bring a light along of you and read a bit to me,
Who haven't heard a word of it since first I went to sea."

It's five and twenty year, lad, since she went to her rest,
Who put that there old Bible at the bottom of my chest;
And I can well remember the words that she said to me—
"Now don't forget to read it, Tom, when you get out to sea.

And I never thought of it, mate, for it clean slipped from my head,
But when I come from that first voyage the dear old girl was dead;
And the neighbors told me, while I stood as still 's could be,
Then she prayed for me and blessed me, as was just gone out to sea.

And then I shipped again, mate, and forgot the Bible there,
For I never give a thought to it a-sailing everywhere;
But now that I am dying you can read a bit to me,
As seems to think about it now I am ill and down at sea.

It's set in dark, mate, and I think I'll say good night,
But stop—look there! why, mate, why, Bill, the cabin's turning light;
And the dear old mother's standing there as gave the book to me,
All right; I'm coming! Bill, good-bye! My soul's going out to sea!

—Chamber's Journal.

THE OLD ROOFTREE.

"Hello, Jim! Where have you been lately?" shouted a broker the other evening to a portly, finely dressed man in the corridor of the St. James. The gentleman stopped, shook hands with his friend, and replied, "I've been home to see my old father and mother, the first time in sixteen years, and I tell you, old man, I wouldn't have missed that visit for all my fortune."

"Kinder good to visit your boyhood home, eh?"

"You bet. Sit down. I was just thinking about the old folks, and feel talkative. If you have a few moments to spare, sit down, light a cigar, and listen to the story of a rich man who had almost forgotten his father and mother."

They sat down, and the man told his story.

"How I came to visit my home happened in a curious way. Six weeks ago I went down to Fire Island fishing. I had a lunch put up at Crook & Fash's, and you can imagine my surprise when I opened the hamper to find a package of crackers wrapped up in a piece of newspaper. The newspaper was the little patent inside country weekly published at my home in Wisconsin. I read every word of it, advertisements and all. There was George Kellogg, who was a schoolmate of mine, advertising hams and salt pork, and another boy was postmaster. By George! it made me homesick, and I determined then and there to go home, and go home I did.

"In the first place I must tell you how I came to New York. I had a tiff with may father and left home. I finally turned up in New York with $1 in my pocket. I got a job running a freight elevator in the very house in which I am now a partner. My haste to get rich drove the thoughts of my parents from me, and when I did think of them the hard words that my father last spoke to me rankled in my bosom. Well, I went home. I didn't see much change in Chicago, but the magnificent new depot in Milwaukee I thought was an improvement on the old shed that they used to have. It was only thirty miles from my home, and I tell you, John, that train seem to creep. I was actually worse than a school boy going home on a vacation. At last we neared the town. Familiar sights met my eyes, and, darn it all! they filled with tears. There was Bill Lyman's red barn, just the same; but, great Scott! what were all of the other houses? We rode nearly a mile before coming to the depot, though houses where only occasionally I saw one that was familiar. The town had grown to ten times its size when I knew it. The train stopped and I jumped off. Not a face in sight that I knew, and I started down the platform to go home. In the office door stood the station gent I walked up to him and said, "how do you do, Mr. Collins?"

"He stared at me and replied, 'You have got the best of me, sir.'

"I told him who I was and what I had been doing in New York, and he didn't make any bones in talking to me. Said he: 'It's about time you came home. You in New York rich, and your father scratching gravel to get a bare living.'

"I tell you, John, it knocked me all in a heap. I thought my father had enough to live on comfortably. Then a notion struck me. Before going home I telegraphed to Chicago to one of our correspondents to send me $1000 by the first mail. Then I went into Mr. Collins's back office, got my trunk in there and put on an old suit of hand-me-downs, that I had used for hunting and fishing. My plug hat I replaced by a soft hat, took my valise in my hand and went home. Somehow the place didn't look right. The currant bushes had been dug up from the front yard and the fence was gone. All the old locust trees had been cut down and young maples were planted. The house looked smaller somehow, too. But I went up to the front door and rang the bell. Mother came to the door and said: 'We don't wish to buy anything to-day, sir.'

"It didn't take me a minute to survey her from head to foot. Neatly dressed, John, but a patch and a darn here and there, her hair streaked with gray, her face thin, drawn and wrinkled. Yet over her eyeglass shone those good, honest, benvolent eyes. I stood staring at her and then she began to stare at me. I saw the blood rush to her face and with a great sob she threw herself upon me and nervously clasped me about the neck, hysterically crying: 'It's Jimmy, it's Jimmy.'

"Then I cried, too, John. I just broke down and cried like a baby. She got me into the house, hugging and kissing me, and then she went to the back door and shouted 'George!'

"Father came to the kitchen door and asked, 'What do you want, Caroline?'

"Then he came in. He knew me in a moment. He stuck out his hand and grasped mine, and said, sternly, 'Well, young man, do you propose to behave yourself now?'

"He tried to put on a brave front, but he broke down. There we sat, like whipped school children, all whimpering. At last supper time came and mother went out to get it. I went into the kitchen with her.

"'Where do you live, Jimmy?' she asked.

"'In New York,' I replied.

"'What are you workin' at now, Jimmy?'

"'I'm working in a dry goods store.'

"'Then I don't suppose you live very high, for I hear tell o' them city clerks what don't get money enough to keep body and soul together. So I'll just tell you, Jimmy, we've got nothing but roast spareribs for supper. We ain't got any money now, Jimmy. We're poorer nor Job's turkey.'

I told her that I would be delighted with the spareibs, and to tell the truth, John, I haven't eaten a meal in New York that tasted as well as those crisp roasted spareribs did. I spent the evening playing checkers with father, while mother sat by telling me all about their misfortunes, from old white Mooley getting drowned in the pond to father's signing a note for a friend and having to mortgage the place to pay it. The mortgage was due inside of a week and not a cent to meet it with—just $800. She supposed they would be turned out of house and home, but in my mind I supposed they wouldn't. At last 9 o'clock came, and father said: 'Jim, go out to the barn and see if Kit is all right. Bring in an armful of old shingles that are just inside the door and fill up the water pail. Then we'll go off to bed and get up early and go a fishing.'

"I didn't say a word, but I went out to the barn, bedded down the horse, broke up an armful of shingles, pumped a pail of water, filled the woodbox, and then we all went to bed.

"Father called me at 4.30 in the morning, and while he was getting a cup of coffee I skipped over to the depot cross iots and got my best bass rod. Father took nothing but a trolling line and spoon hook. He rowed the boat with his trolling line in his mouth, while I stood in the stern with a silver shiner rigged on. Now, John, I never saw a man catch fish like he did. To make a long story short, he caught four bass and five pickerel and I never got a bite.

"At noon we went ashore and father went home, while I went to the post office. I got a letter from Chicago with a check for $1000 in it. With some trouble I got it cashed, getting paid in $5 and $10 bills, making quite a roll. I then got a roast joint of beef and a lot of delicacies and had them sent home. After that I went visiting among my old schoolmates for two hours and went home. The joint was in the oven. Mother had put on her only silk dress, and father had donned his Sunday go to meeting clothes, none too good, either. This is where I played a joke on the old folks. Mother was in the kitchen watching the roast. Father was out to the barn, and I had a clear coast. I dumped the sugar out of the old blue bowl, put the thousand dollars in it and placed the cover on again. At last supper was ready. Father asked a blessing over it, and he actually trembled when he stuck his knife in the roast.

"'We haven't had a piece of meat like this in five years, Jim,' he said; and mother put in with, 'And we haven't had any coffee in a year, only when we went a-visitin'.'

"Then she poured out the coffee and lifted the cover of the sugar bowl, asking as she did so: 'How many spoons, Jimmy?'

"Then she struck something that wasn't sugar. She picked up the bowl and peered into it. 'Aha, Master Jimmy, playin' your old tricks on your mammy, eh? Well, boys will be boys.'

"Then she gasped for breath. She saw it was money. She looked at me, then at father, and then with trembling fingers drew the great roll of bills out.

"Ha! ha! ha! I can see father now as he stood there then on tiptoe, with his knife in one hand, fork in the other and his eyes fairly bulging out of his head. But it was too much for mother. She raised her eyes to heaven and said slowly: 'Put your trust in the Lord, for he will provide.'

"Then she fainted away. Well, John, there's not much more to tell. We threw water in her face and brought her to, and we demolished that dinner, mother all the time saying, 'My boy Jimmy! My boy Jimmy!'

"I stayed home a month. I fixed up the place, paid off all debts, had a good time and came back again to New York. I am going to send $50 home every week. I tell you, John, it's mighty nice to have a home."

John was looking steadily at the head of his cane. When he spoke he took Jim by the hand and said: "Jim, old friend, what you have told me has affected me greatly. I haven't heard from my home way up in Maine for ten years. I'm going home to-morrow."—New York Sun.

Mr. Benchwarmer—"Well, the base ball season is nearly over."

Mrs. Benchwarmer—"Well, what of it?"

Mr. B.—"A great deal. Where am I going to get my exercise? You know I can't skate or row, and I hate the toboggan slide."

Mrs. B.—"Yes, I know, but what's the matter with putting down carpets, chopping wood, carrying coal—"

Mr. B.—"Woman, do you take me for a slave?"

A HEROIC REMEDY.

Mrs. Archer is a very good woman and one who believes in keeping the household as free from the contamination of the world as possible. But she has a husband and three growing boys, and they are, to use their own words, "up to snuff."

"I do wish you wouldn't use so much slang," the good woman would say in a tone of remonstrance.

"Why, mother, we must keep up with the times," the boys would answer, "you are away back."

"Don't swear, John," she said to her husband one day.

"That isn't swearing," he said, "everybody talks that way, Susan."

No more was said just then, but a few days later Mrs. Archer suddenly remarked at the supper table:

"Great Scott! Kitty must have a lot of cheek to think we can eat butter as salt as that stuff!"

Mr. Archer looked up in a startled manner, but before he could speak his wife resumed:

"Holy Moses! it makes me tired to drink tea as cold as ice water."

The boys kept an uncomfortable silence. Presently Mrs. Archer said:

"That confounded old crank of a Jones was here to see you again to-day, John. I told the old chromo you had no use for him, though."

One of the boys swallowed a biscuit the wrong way at that moment, and nearly choked to death.

"Great Cæsar!" observed Mrs. Archer in a placid voice, totally opposed to the wild variety of her language, "I nearly forgot that I've got to see a feller down town this eve. Going out on a little racket of my own. Ta, ta, love; you see I'm not as fresh as I used to be. No flies on me—so long." and with an air that was the counterpart of John Archer's own, the good woman swaggered from the table.

The English language, pure and undefiled, is spoken in that family now, and the vocabulary of slang has fallen into welcome desuetude.

FIRST BABY'S SHOES.

The first baby, when she needs her first pair of shoes, hears this from her proud and happy father:

"And does it want some 'ittle shoes-ums for its 'ittle feet-ums?" Well, papa shall get it all the 'ittle shoes-ums it wants, so he shall."

When the order for the second pair comes he seems to be a little surprised, and says:

"What! has papa's little girl worn out its pretty new shoes so soon? She is a little rough, so she is, to kick out her shoes so."

Before the child is a month older her toes are to be seen through her third pair of shoes,

"What!" cries papa, when he is informed of the fact. "Well, I'd just like to know how in thunderation that youngster kicks out her shoes so fast? She wears out more shoes than I do. She'd break a bank at that rate."

And when the order for the fifth pair comes, papa observes:

"Well, if this don't beat the Jews! I'd like to know if I've got to get that young one a new pair of shoes every day of her life. I'm tired to death of this thing. If she wants another pair of shoes this month she can take the pennies out of her bank and buy 'em. I won't."

Poor papa!—Texas Siftings.

WHAT NUTMEG TREES ARE LIKE.

Nutmegs grow on little trees which look like small pear trees, and which are generally not over 20 feet high. The flowers are very much like the lily of the valley. They are pale and very fragrant. The nutmeg is the seed of the fruit, and mace is the thin covering over the seed. The fruit is about the size of a peach. When ripe it breaks open and shows the little nut inside. The trees grow on the islands of Asia and tropical America. They bear fruit 70 or 80 years, having ripe fruit on them all the season. A fine tree in Jamaica has over 4000 nutmegs on it every year. The Dutch used to have all this nutmeg trade, as they owned the Banda islands and conquered all the other traders and destroyed all their trees. To keep the price up they once burned three piles of nutmegs, each of which was said to be "as big as a church." Nature did not sympathize with such meanness. The nutmeg pigeon, found in all the Indian islands, did for the world what the Dutch had determined should not be done—carried the seeds, which are their food, into all the surrounding countries.

THE OLDEST NEWSPAPER.

It is generally believed that the Times of London and the Gazette de France of Paris are the oldest papers in existence, but this appears to be a mistake. The honor belongs to the Chinese, who possess a journal started nearly one thousand years ago. Its name is the King Pan. It was founded says a learned bibliophilist, in the year 911 of the Christian era. At first it was published at irregular intervals, but in 1361 it became a weekly. In 1804 it underwent another transformation, and appeared daily. It costs a half penny, and issues three editions. The morning edition, printed on yellow paper, is devoted to commerce; the noon edition, printed on white paper, contains official acts and miscellaneous news, while the evening edition, printed on red paper, is taken up with political information and leading articles. It is edited by six members of the Academy of Science, and the total sale of the three editions is 14,000 copies.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Almost any gunsmith will rent you a gun for a day's shoot and sell you the ammunition. You can easily buy the game at the market. Thus is hunting made easy.—Boston Post.

Three lilies, imported from China, are on exhibition in the window of Ching Gee's Chinese laundry, and attract considerable attention.

It is understood that the Mohawk Minstrels have passed into history, and will not present an entertainment in March as proposed.

Two cases of measles are reported by the board of health this week. Another case of diphtheria at Thorndike is also reported by the board.

W. R. Milligan is thinking of erecting a house next spring on the lot between the residences of John Foster and A. H. Willis on Thorndike street.

The A. R. F. A. R. Club will hold it first annual ball at the Nassowanno House hall Monday evening, Dec. 26th. The Palmer Orchestra will furnish music.

The Woman's Relief Corps is considering the advisability of presenting a drama sometime during the winter for the benefit of L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R.

The Mission Circle of the Congregational church will give a dramatic and musical entertainment at the church this evening. An admission of 15 cents will be charged.

One young man in town took leave of his best girl in the open doorway of the lighted hall last Sunday evening, and he had quite a circus over it—so did the neighbors.

C. L. Alexander is preparing the tract of land recently leased by him at Amherst, and next year proposes to make 5,000,000 brick there in addition to the product of his West Brimfield yard.

Officers of the Law and Order League raided the saloon of George Griffin on Walnut street Saturday night, seizing a quantity of beer, which was immediately sent to Boston for analysis.

The lease of the North Monson mill to Lindley & Company expires May 1, 1888, and will not be renewed, the indications being that the factory will be shut down for an indefinite time.

An overcoat valued at $20 was stolen from the clothing store of J. Simmons on Main street Wednesday, while hanging upon a form in front of the store, and there is no clue to the thief.

James Murphy, in "Kerry Gow," will appear at Park street rink Jan. 4th. The company is said to be a first-class one, and as this play is a favorite here it will undoubtedly draw a large house.

Dr. McGlynn and Henry George stopped at Palmer several hours Tuesday afternoon while on their way to Amherst, where the students of the college listened to their land theories the same evening.

The red flag hung out at C. N. Coleman's, corner of Main and Central streets, does not indicate an auction sale, only a case of scarlet fever, which the board of health desires to keep from spreading.

Thomas Murphy, a brakeman employed on the New London Northern road, who met with an accident on the southern division of the line recently, has returned to Palmer and is recovering rapidly.

C. T. Brainerd has leased the Blanchardville pond, and is building an ice house with a capacity for 800 tons. He intends to fill it this winter and run an ice cart through the village next season.

It is rumored that W. C. Dewey will in the spring build an opera house on his recently purchased French property in this village. The building will face on Central street, about 150 feet from Main.

The Patterson Club met at the residence of Stillman Ellis on Park street Wednesday evening. A fine musical entertainment was rendered, one number being an excellent clarionet solo by E. A. Wall of Pittsburg, Pa.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor celebrated its first anniversary at the Congregational church last Sunday evening, with short papers from different members, singing, and an address by the pastor.

The high school improvement society, who organization is chronicled in another place, will appropriately observe the eighteenth birthday of John G. Whittier, by hanging a life-size portrait of the poet in the school room.

The evening dancing class, which has formerly met at the Weeks House hall Thursday evenings, has been given up by the instructor owing to the small attendance. The afternoon class is a large one and will be continued.

Under the Palmer items the Springfield Union stated one day last week that "D.W. Taft, manager at the state house, Boston, is in town." Palmer people had understood that "Dan" had a pretty good berth down at the Hub, but they didn't think that he had got to be manager just yet.

The headquarters of the Ancient Order of United Workmen will hereafter be at Three Rivers, having been changed last week. The majority of the active members in the order reside there, and therefore it was deemed advisable to make the change. The lodge is flourishing.

A horse owned by William Carroll of Monson, while standing near the Palmer National Bank last Saturday afternoon, became frightened at a passing train and ran down South Main street, colliding with a hydrant and badly demolishing the wagon and harness. No one was injured.

Freight train No. 32 on the New London Northern road, due in Palmer at 4 40 p. m., was derailed at Amherst Saturday night by the spreading of the track, thereby causing a temporary blockade, the boat train arriving in Palmer at 7.45 p. m., nearly two hours late. No one was injured by the accident.

A match game of polo will be played at Park street rink to-morrow evening between the Palmers and Springfields. After the game there will be a running race between J. McCarty of Gilbertville, champion runner of Worcester county, and Thomas Parker of Palmer, for a purse. The game is called at 9 o'clock.

The following towns are requested to send five delegates each to the base ball convention to be held in the district court room here next Thursday at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of forming the Western Massachusetts league for the season of 1888: Palmer, Monson, Ludlow, Ware, Warren, Hampden, Thorndike and Three Rivers.

A team belonging to H. A. Rindge, who resides on the quarry road, was standing in front of Hitchcock & Blanchard's Friday afternoon when the horse became frightened and ran to South Main street, where it was captured. The vehicle, which was slightly damaged, contained a new stove, the value of which was somewhat lessed by its rapid ride.

Plans for the new high school building have been submitted by various architects to the committee appointed by the town. The plans submitted by Richmond & Seabury of Springfield are considered the most desirable, and it is quite probable they will be adopted. The work of putting in the foundation of the building will be begun early next spring.

The annual meeting of the library association was held Wednesday eveuing, and these officers were chosen for the coming year: President, W. C. Greene; vice president, Dr. W. H. Stowe; secretary, W. W. Leach; treasurer, F. L. Brooks; librarian, O. P. Allen; directors, O. P. Allen, Dr. W. H. Stowe, Rev. H. W. Pope, W. C. Dewey, W C. Greene. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $354.21 now on hand.

Palmer merchants have been busy the past week arranging their display of holiday goods, and the assortment is unusually large and fine. Never before has so great a variety and so nice a line of goods been shown in this village, and no one need to go out of town for holiday goods this season. Our advertising columns contain many announcements to intending purchasers, who will find valuable hints in their perusal.

John Shea, a farmer employed by W. F. Fay, on the road leading to Monson, was badly gored by a bull last Friday, the horn of the animal penetrating the man's thigh about four inches. Fay's dog appeared on the spot, and after persistent attempts managed to divert the animal's attention and prevent it from killing the man. Dr. William Holbrook dressed the wounds, which were quite serious, although it is thought he will recover.

The Boston & Albany road gave its stockholders the annual free ride to Boston this week, allowing them to go Tuesday and return Thursday, though the majority of them went Wednesday. By a careful count it is ascertained that just 317 persons from Palmer and the neighboring towns took the ride from this station. Of this number 7 actually owned the stock they represented, it was owned in the family in 13 cases, and the remaining 297 borrowed. The local merchants do not admire the change from February to December, as it is apt to affect their holiday trade.

Christmas at the state primary school will be well observed this year. The churches are also arranging some special musical programmes for the event. At St. Thomas' Catholic church Peter's mass in D. will be given with orchestral accompaniment. The following ladies and gentlemen will participate: Musical director, John Masterson; organist, Miss Maggie Kerigan; sopranos, Miss Lizzie Kerigan, Miss Mamie Thompson, Miss Emma King, Miss Annie Murphy and Miss Maria Grady; tenor, William Olney; bassos, John Kerigan, C. E. Leonard and John Connor; orchestra, John Masterson, F. O. Munger, F. R. Sistare, W. H. Kellogg and W. A. Weld.

The creelers who left the employ of the Palmer Carpet Company recently are said to be anxious to return to work, but owing to the present outlook, as regards orders for carpeting, it is somewhat doubtful whether all of them will be taken back. It is stated that the weavers are receiving the same amount per day as is being paid by any firm of the kind in the country, and therefore it is thought there will be no further grievance. At the annual meeting of the company Wednesday the following officers were elected: President, J. S. Holden, treasurer, W. C. Dewey; directors, J. S. Holden, Charles E. Dewey, George Robinson, W. C. Dewey of Palmer and F. T. Kellogg of Springfield.

A fine new cherry front is soon to be put in the store occupied by Dwyer & Sullivan, in the Cross block, and there is a probability that a new front will also be put in the saloon of S. L. Ferry, which adjoins the store. The new front will have plate-glass windows, and will be similar to that of S. H. Hellyar & Co's. The partition in the store of Dwyer & Sullivan is to be moved so as to take in a portion of the saloon, thereby greatly enlarging the former. Aside from this a large store-house will be erected in the rear of the store, and other improvements which Mr. Cross contemplates making will add greatly to the internal and external appearance of the block. F. F. Marcy will probably be awarded the contract.

At the district court last Saturday the case of John Lester of Three Rivers, for illegal liquor keeping, was continued until to-morrow. Michael M. Flynn, for being a stubborn child, had a hearing Tuesday before State Agent Thomas H. Benton of Springfield. The child was admonished and discharged. Michael Daley and Henry Hanson, two juveniles charged with malicious mischief were also arranged before the state agent the same day. They were both discharged by agreeing to adjust the matter with Chas. Smith, to whose house the damage was done. Daniel Garrity of Springfield, for drunkeness has ordered to pay fine and costs amounting to $7.18, in default of which he was committed. This court will send two appealed and four grand jury cases to the superior court next Monday for trial.

Rev. John Reynolds Bigelow, M. D., formerly pastor of the Baptist church at Three Rivers, died at Washington, D. C., November 13. His wife is a sister of W. R. Parks of this place. At one time he was the publisher of the Baptist Memorial, and other works, at New York, and graduated from the New York Medical College, then practiced medicine successfully in New York until the late civil war broke out. During all his labors he made himself highly useful as a gospel minister, and was instrumental in organizing a Baptist church in Harlem, and another in Williamsburg. But when his services were needed in the army they were at once offered as an army surgeon, and held that position until the war closed, but never forgetting his higher commission as a minister of Christ He knew well how to minister to both body and soul, as hundreds of brave, sick and wounded soldiers can testify. On retiring from the army he was received into the office of pensions, where he continued to examine the claims of pension applicants until his health broke down.

HIGH SCHOOL LECTURE COURSE.

On Tuesday of this week the officers and pupils of the high school organized for effective work in line of equipment for the school room. These officers were elected: President, H. B. Knox; vice president, Miss Helen Cobb; secretary, Miss Julia Winchell; treasurer, Charles Hunt; executive committee, Norman Chandler, Mina Ball, Alice Brown, Cyrus Stimson, Arabel Knox. The school proposes to have a piano; they want it, they need it, must have it, are going to get it. True to its mission as an educator, the school has determined to give the public the best course of lectures and entertainments ever presented in this town. But from this course some net profit is expected. These two facts are reconciled by the statement that lecturers have been reached through personal friends instead of through a lecture bureau, and thus talent of the highest order secured at a fraction of ordinary charges. A series of five entertainments will be given for the sum of $1 for the course; admission to single entertainments, 25 to 35 cents. For two reasons this course ought to receive the most liberal patronage from the citizens of Palmer. First because in itself it will be most worthy; second, because the cause behind the movement ought to lie nearer the hearts of the people than any other interest, and we bespeak for the boys and girls, when they shall come to canvass with their tickets, a hearty reception and a generous response. The course will open with an illustrated lecture, "The Sands of the Nile," by Geo. Parsons Gilman, than whom no finer artist in his line is upon the stage to-day. Opening a course in aid of the building fund of the Central Congregational church, Newtonville, last winter, Mr. Parsons was at once re-engaged, and gave the lectures in a course of five. The same thing happened at the North church in Springfield, Mr. Gilman will be followed by Prof. Ralph G. Hibbard, whom the Springfield Republican recently declared the first of elocutionists. Certainly Prof. Hibbard has no superior. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore will follow later, also an illustrated lecture by Rev. N. L. Gage, D. D. of Hartford, a great traveler who knows how to tell what he has seen. The fifth entertainment shall be the best of the course, if possible; whether a lecture or a concert will be announced soon.

WEST WARREN.

The public schools close this week, and the night schools follow suit.

The stores have assumed their holiday attire, and some very good displays are made.

The weather clerk doesn't seem to be in league with the coal men this year, as coal is way up and the weather very mild.

The Congregational society is making arrangements for a supper and entertainment in Crossman's Hall some night next week.

The Warren Cotton Mills unloaded 742 bales of cotton last week, the largest amount of cotton they ever received in one week.

Miss Della A. Clark, Vice Templar of Beacon Light Lodge of Good Templars, has gone to Westboro to work in one of the starw shops.

BELCHERTOWN.

Mrs. Lydia Barton, librarian at the Memorial Library, is doing efficient work there, Everything is kept in perfect order, and the cheerfulness and courtesy she has shown those she has served has won the admiration of the community.

Vernon Lodge of Masons held a public installation at the M. E. church Wednesday evening, and the services were very interesting. The officers were installed by W. H. Bridgman. A double quartette rendered music for the occasion, doing much credit to themselves. After the installation 125 masons retired to the vestry, where a collation was served and a general good time was enjoyed by all. The following is the list of officers for the ensuing year: Robert W. Lyman, W. M.; Geo. W. Canterbury, S. W.; Joseph R. Gould, J. W.; Wm. E. Bridgman, Treas.; Franklin W. Fuller, sentry; Rev. Wm. F. Lawford, chap.; R. E. Fairchild, M.; Frank B. Alden, T. D.; Edwin S. Snow, J. D.; Lucius Bixby, S. S.; Henry W. Morgan, J. S.; Guy C. Allen, O.; Edwin F. Smith, T.

BRIMFIELD.

The fall term of the Hitchcock Free High School closed to-day with a public examination occupying the whole day.

There will be a grand social dance at the town hall this evening. Music by Bellville & Crosby's Orchestra. Dancing from 8 to 2.

The Congregational society has decided to have a grand time on the evening of the 26th, in celebration of Christmas. The main feature will be a cantata of about an hour's length.

Last week Thursday Sanford Booth killed a steer that had been sick for several weeks. The attention of the selectmen as a board of health was called to the same, and on Monday they submitted a portion of the meat to E. C. Vinton, U. S., who gave it as his opinion that the disease of the animal was tuberculosis, and recommended that the herd of Mr. Booth should be examined to see if others were infected. Acting upon this the board of health ordered Mr. Booth's herd of cattle to be isolated, until such time as the commissioners on diseases of domestic animals should otherwise order, and notice of the matter was sent to the aforesaid commissioners.

WARREN.

Marcus Burroughs has been appointed executor of the will of Eliza S. Burroughs.

Santa Claus has made his headquarters at Mrs. C. A. Metcalf's, and shows a large assortment of goods.

The Sons of Veterans have made choice of these officers: Captain, Silas A. Brown; first lieutenant, George H. Bennett; second lieutenant, John W. Leach; camp council, W. H. Kelly, L. B. Coash, Arthur Anona; delegate to department encampment, Robert S. Bliss; alternate, W. H. Kelly.

The Grand Army post has elected the following officers: Commander, L. W. Gilbert; S. V. C., Amos Bliss; J. V. C., Geo. Bliss; Q. M., L. L. Gage; surgeon, J. H. Brown; chaplain, J. G. Leach; O. D., H. M. Converse; O. G., Warriner Bliss; delegate to department encampment, H. M. Converse; alternate, John Thayer.

The young people of the Universalist church have arranged for a series of five entertainments, as follows: Dec. 29, reading by Henry B. Bacon, assisted by a male quartette; Jan. 19, lecture by Rev C. A. Knickerbocker of Meriden, Ct.; Feb. 16, lecture by Rev. S. A. Gardner of Milford; Mar. 13, lecture by Rev. Dr. Canfield of Brooklyn, N. Y.; and an organ concert, date to be announced. Course tickets will be $1.

THREE RIVERS.

Fire was discovered in the picker room at the Palmer Mill about 4 30 p. m. Wednesday but fortunately it was extinguished before it had made much headway or done any damage.

The musical entertainment at the Union church Wednesday evening was a success in every particular. The principal feature of the evening was the cornet playing by the Fairchild Sisters, daughters of the popular station agent at Belchertown. They are deserving of credit for the masterly manner in which they handle the cornet, and each selection rendered showed through training and practice. The vocal duets by Mrs. Millikin and Mrs. Upham were also nicely given.

"How can we draw in the poor?" That is almost the only religious question worth asking nowadays. That is what bothers and interests every religious convention. Every church and every minister must answer it for themselves." The above appeared in your issue of last week, in connection with an article signed "Independent," and will be answered next Sunday morning in the Baptist church at Three Rivers. Subject, "Christ a workingman, a workingman's friend, and why he became such." A preaching service will also be held in the evening at 7. Subject, "The church of Christ a workingman's church." All are earnestly invited.

The public schools commenced their winter term Monday, with but little change of teachers, Miss N. B. Pratt taking the place of Miss Cora M. Pease at No 8, and Miss Pease taking the place of Miss Emma Vinton, resigned, at No. 5.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

W. L. Collins has two of the original pikes manufactured for John Brown when he was preparing for his famous Harpers Ferry raid.

A good delegation from Grace church attended the fellowship meeting at Indian Orchard Thursday evening. The subject was the "danger of delay."

E. H. Cutler, just home from Dakota, reports the weather as fine there, with very little snow, just enough for good sleighing, about a foot of snow in Minnesota, and none at all this side of Chicago. He speaks very highly of that country.

Only a small number attended the special town meeting Monday, to hear the report regarding the condition of the Red Bridge. It was the opinion of an expert that the present bridge could be repaired for $500, and rendered safe for twenty years. It was voted to repair, provided Ludlow concured, and the matter was left in the hands of the selectmen.

A very "sweet" accident happened at the freight house here last Monday. The Wesleyan Academy teamster, in trying to load a hogshead of molasses upon his wagon, rolled it on to the ground. One head came out and it is supposed that now the poor students are getting along without molasses on their bread, they certainly are unless they have another supply, as only six or eight gallons of this lot was saved.

Rev. L. H. Reed closed his labor at Grace church Sunday evening with a stirring address to the church members, the new converts and the unconverted. His work has been very successful, with twelve or fourteen conversions. Several associate members of the Y. P. S. C. E. have been transfered to the active list, and more are expected to follow. The regular business meeting of the society, with election of officers for the ensuing six months, was to have been held Tuesday evening, but was postponed, and a devotional meeting held instead, at which over thirty were present. The business meeting will probably be next Monday evening.

THORNDIKE.

Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Bishop spent part of the week with friends in Boston.

Much sickness prevails in our midst, and the doctors are having all they can attend to.

All the merchants report a good trade during the past week, especially in holiday goods.

Eli Dimo is putting up a large two-story house at Four Corners, which is nearly finished.

The prosecuting committee made a search in two places Tuesday evening, but the ardent was not to be found.

Mrs. Kate O'Connor, proprietress of the Clinton House, has recovered from her illness, and is now able to attend to business again.

The young people's club will gave an entertainment at Union Hall the 23 1, when they will present the drama "Young Joe and Old Joe."

The Thorndike branch of the Democratic club met at their quarters in the Lawton's building Thursday evening, and the main question for debate was the tariff question, which was handled in good style by local politicians.

Druggist A. P. Adams has completed a crayon portrait, life size, of the late paymaster of the Thorndike Co., E. W. Andrews. As a work of art it is nicely executed, and is a good re-production of the features of the deceased.

The 40 hours' devotion which was held at St. Mary's Catholic church the past week was attended by an unusually large number. Priests from the neighboring villages were present and assisted at the services. Masses were held Tuesday morning at 5 30 and 8 o'clock.

Action in regard to organizing a base ball association has been postponed until after the next convention, which will be neld at Palmer on Thursday next. Thorndike will send the following delegates to represent their interests at the convention: James Staples, W. W. Thayer, D. J. Sullivan, John F. Luman, S. S. Greene.

The local assembly, Knights of Labor, moved into their new quarters in Lawton's building Tuesday evening. After the regular routine business was transacted an entertaiment was given by the members. The assembly has recently placed a fine New England Organ in their rooms, to be used at their entertainments, which will be given once in two weeks.

MONSON.

The Bible Society met with Mrs. Priest, Thursday evening.

Merchants are busily filling their stores with holiday goods.

Doctor Fuller is putting running water into all of Mark Noble's buildings.

Flynt & Sons have an unusually large display of holiday goods of all kinds.

Chas. Orcutt is giving private vocal lessons to quite a number of pupils.

Mrs. Benjamin Grout, who came East with her husband, will return soon.

John A. Orcutt has sold his house on King avenue to George Hobbs of Wales.

Rev. J. H. Emerson, pastor of the M. E. church, is visiting friends in Boston and vicinity this week.

The Monson Orchestra has the contract to furnish music for the grand ball at Stafford Springs, December 30 h.

The evening school was opened Monday night in district No. 8, with C. L. Jewett as teacher, and a good attendance.

The St. Patrick society is clearing off the pine trees north of the church, on the land recently purchased of A. N. Chaffee, and a parsonage will be erected in the spring.

The annual sale of the Young Ladies Working Club, at the Congregational church last Friday evening was a grand success. The club will realize about $70, which goes for the support of a teacher on the frontier.

George Thompson exhibits a curious specimen of an Indian hatchet, which plowed up south of his house one day last week. The hatchet is of stone, half-moon shape, about 5 by 3½ inches in size.

The suit of William Carroll against A. J. Jenks of Chicopee for a part of the $4000 reward for the arrest and conviction of the academy incendiaries, has been settled by Carroll receiving one-half of that sum Carroll's claim was made on the fact that he furnished Jenks the information which led to the arrests.

A surprise in every sense of the word was given Lyman Miller at his home Thursday evening by the employes at Gage & Reynolds's straw shop. Refreshments, games, etc., made the evening one long to be remembered. Before taking leave, however, John Cross, in behalf of the young ladies of his room, presented Mr. Miller with a fine easy chair, to which he replied in a few words.

Miss Della King, only daughter of Wyles King, died at her father's house last Saturday of consumption. The funeral was at the house Tuesday afternoon at 1 p. m., Rev. Mr. Priest officiating. Among the floral emblems was a beautiful pillow of rose buds, with the word "Dell," from her shopmates at Gage & Reynolds's shop, and a wreath from her Sunday-school class. The interment was at the village cemetery.

The North Monson school house was broken into by some miscreant last week Thursday. The party obtained an entrance by breaking in the window, and it was evident he wished to keep warm, as furniture was broken up and books used freely to keep a fire. The clock and some other small articles were missing. The same morning a man, evidently a tramp, offered articles for sale in town which answered the description of those stolen from the school house.

Universalist Pastor Ordained

TUESDAY WITH INTERESTING EXERCISES.

The ordination of Ira A. Priest as pastor of the First Universalist church was held in Central Hall Tuesday evening. The stage was tastfully trimmed with evergreen, and the hall was well filled with people. The service opened by the organ prelude, followed by an invocation by Rev. F. W. Betts of Palmer. Rev. F. O. Hall of Fitchburg read a selection from the scriptures, and Rev. W. A. Start of Boston read the record of the ordaining committee. Miss Mary Feather sang "The Lord is My Shepard." The ordaining sermon was preached by Rev. J. M. Pullman, D. D., of Lynn. He took his text from St. Paul's first letter to the Corinthians, 15:24. "For he must reign till He has put all His enemies under His feet." The two questions of this occasion are, he said:

1. Why does a young man devote his life to the ministry? and 2. Why does he choose the Universalist church as the sphere of his devotion and activity? Under our happy circumstances of individual liberty of conscience I cannot speak for our young friend, except as I speak for myself. I am in the Universalist church because I desire to remain a Christian believer, and I cannot accept the tuition of the present creeds. But my Universalism is not a dedominational prison in which I immure myself. It is the bridge by which I cross from Mediæval to Modern Christianity. 2. I am a Universalist because I would not have evil endure forever, and there is no proof that it will do so. The proposition of the Universalist faith is that evil, though formidable, is vulnerable. I find the salient aspect of life to be the struggle with evil—with inherited defect, weakness, ignorance, selfishness and malice. In man's attempt to throw off this brute-inheritance—to "move upward, working out the beast, and let the ape and tiger die." I find religions to be valuable and helpful in proportion as they inspire help and courage. Faith as the vulnerability of evil has always been the inspiration of the world's strong men. There is no authority in what we know of the past, or see of the present—in the nature of man or the character of God—for the creeds of ruin and despair. 3. Man is the instrument through which evil is to be overcome. I find that nobody is going to save me, in the sense of overcoming my evil for me. Weakness finds help, indecision finds its deterring crisis, blindness its light and ignorance its guide, but along the road of conquest over his own evil, every man must himself go. The mightiest forces that are visible operating in personal and natural history on this planet are the forces that are employed in preventing evil from settling into permanence. The ploughshare of vexatious is forever breaking up the inveteracy of habit. The law of retribution leaves no soul alone with its sins. 4. The conflict with evil is a mutual struggle—a race conflict. I find that my race is an organic whole, and that I must share my race destiny or whatever it is. I cannot resign, emigrate nor isolate myself in selfish security. "Heaven's gate is shut to him who comes alone" The strong must help the weak, the wise the foolish, the good the bad, until all are strong, wise and good. We are an eternal and indissoluble brotherhood. 5. The conflict with evil is not confined to this brief stage of life. A wholly moral conflict cannot be determined by physical changes. Not one word of our Bible connects the death of the body with a final crisis of the soul. The whole moral universe is the arena of this struggle. "Things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth," are implicated with it. God does not display all His forces on this little field. The magnificent drama of the conflict of light with darkness cannot be crowded upon this narrow stage of life. The Christian solution of life's unfinished story is—victory over evil! 6. God Himself is implicated with us in this conflict over evil. We do not struggle with the curse of our brute-inheritance without the sympaty of Heaven. God Himself shares with us the struggle, the defeat, the victory. This is what that cross on Calvary means—it means that the diviner the being the closer His sympathy with man in his conflict. And where, think you, is that pain-sharing Christ now? At the post of honor on the right hand of God! And where is the right hand of God? Where else but where it is needed, in the thick of the fight against evil, here and everywhere! It is no small part of the Universalist church to bring back from the long exile to which Latin Christianity has banished it, the conception of the indwelling God. I have gone back to the seventh century to find a pledge for the Universalist minister—"Never will I seek, nor receive private, individual salvation—never enter into final peace alone; but forever and and everwhere will I live and strive for the universal redemption of every creature throughout all worlds. While one remains outcast, I will count myself as lost; until all are delivered, I will never voluntarily leave the field of sin, sorrow and struggle."

Rev. M. H. Harris of Worcester then offered the ordaining prayer, and Mrs. C. H. Bruce sang "Ave Maria," Rev. W. A. Start of Boston extended the fellowship of the church, and Rev. R A. White of Newtonville gave the charge to the pastor. The ordination hymn, written for the occasion by Rev. G. V. Maxham, was read by Rev. J. F. Simmons of Stafford, and sang by the congregation. Prof. C. H. Leonard of Tuft's College delivered the charge to the people, and Rev. F. W. Betts of Palmer offered the closing prayer, the pastor pronouncing the benediction.

Ira Allen Priest was born at Mechanicsville, Vt., in 1856, where he worked on a farm and attended the public schools. In 1876 he attended the Goddard Seminary at Barre, from which he graduated four years later. Mr. Priest entered Tufts College in the fall of 1880, and gradnated from the academical department in 1884. He then entered Tufts divinity school and was graduated in June. Mr. Priest was licensed to preach Nov. 22, 1886, and received a call from the First Universalist church in this place last June, which he accepted, and commenced his work in September. Mr. Priest was examined Monday before the council at Boston, which voted unanimously to grant the request for ordination.

DRESSMAKING!

The subscriber wishes to inform the ladies of Palmer that she is prepared to do dressmaking of all kinds at their homes.

Miss CARRIE CROSBY,
4w35 Cor. Walnut and West Streets.

HELLO, CENTRAL!

Call up every family in Palmer and vicinity and tell them to go and see what LONGLEY has for the holidays.

Vases, fancy glass sets, cups and saucers, tea, dinner and toilet sets, elegant lamps, bisque figures, and 1001 things which I have not room to mention, but you must see for yourselves.

SANTA CLAUS' headquarters for fruit and confectionery are at my store, and he authorizes me to sell at very low prices indeed.

H. P. LONGLEY.

Facts You Can Bet On.

That the oldest and largest tobacco factory in the world is in Jersey City, N. J.
That this factory makes the popular and world-famed Climax Plug, the acknowledged standard for first-class chewing tobacco.
That this factory was established as long ago as 1760.
The last year (1886) it made and sold the enormous quantity of 27,982,280 pounds or fourteen thousand tons of tobacco.
That this was more than one-seventh of all the tobacco made in the United States, notwithstanding that there were 966 factories at work.
That in the last 21 years this factory has helped support the United States Government to the extent of over forty-four million seven hundred thousand dollars (44,700,000) paid into the U. S. Treasury in Internal Revenue taxes.
That the pay-roll of this factory is about $1,000,000 per year or $20,000 per week.
That this facory employs about 3500 operatives.
That this factory makes such a wonderfully good chew in Climax Plug that many other factories have tried to imitate it in vain, and in despair now try to attract custom by offering larger pieces of inferior goods for the same price.
That this factory nevertheless continues to increase it business every year.
That this factory belongs to and is operated by Yours, very truly,

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES of the Superior Court now sitting in Springfield within and for the County of Hampden.

Respectfully represent the inhabitants of Palmer, a municipal corporation in said county, that on Monday, the 26th day of September, last, in legal town meeting assembled, they voted to adopt certain by-laws for said town, and their action was as follows; the warrant for said meeting contained among others the following, viz:

Article 4. To see if the town will make any order or by-law regarding preserving the peace and good order of the town and maintaining the internal police thereof, particularly the dispersing of crowds from the sidewalks of the several villages of town.

Acting under said article it was voted to adopt the following by-laws:

SECTION 1. No person shall put or place or cause to be put or placed in any street, lane or alley, or other public place in the town, any house dirt, ashes, filth, shells or other kinds of rubbish.

SEC. 2. No person shall behave himself in a rude or disorderly manner, or use any indecent or profane language in any street, lane, alley or other public place in the town.

SEC. 3. No person shall swim or bathe in any pond, stream or river in the town, divested of clothing, so as to be indecently exposed to the view of any person lawfully passing or being in or upon any street, lane, alley, common, square, railroad or other public place within the town.

SEC. 4. Three or more persons shall not stand together or near each other in any street or on any footwalk or sidewalk in the town, so as to obstruct the free passage for foot passengers, any person or persons so standing, shall move on immediately after a request, so to do, made by either of the selectmen, or any constable, public officer or watchman.

SEC. 5. No person shall be or remain upon the steps of or other projection from any church, hotel, hall or other public building, nor in any hall, space or way leading thereto, so as to incommode or obstruct the passage to and from such church, hall, hotel or building, and every person so being or remaining, when ordered by either of the selectmen, or any constable, police officer, watchman, owner, agent or other person having charge of said church, hotel, hall or other public building, shall immediately depart therefrom.

SEC. 6. Whoever shall offend against or fail to comply with any of the provisions of this ordinance, shall for each and every offence forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than two nor more than twenty dollars.

SEC. 7. No person shall be prosecuted for any offense against any of the provisions of this ordinance unless complaint for the same shall be instituted and commenced within six months from the time of committing such offense.

SEC. 8. The constables and all police officers and watchmen are especially charged to see that the provisions of this ordinance are enforced.

It was also voted: That the selectmen be a committee to present these by-laws to a proper court for their approval.

And said inhabitants pray that said by-laws may be approved by this court to the end that the wishes and intentions of said inhabitants may be carried into effect.

Palmer, Mass., October 26th, A. D., 1887.
By their Attorney,
C. L. GARDNER,

Palmer, Mass., October 26th, 1887.

I hereby certify that at a meeting of the inhabitants of Palmer, duly warned and held on Monday, the 26th day of September, last, the above mentioned by-laws were adopted, as stated in above petition, and that the article of the warrant under which said action was taken, and the votes passed by said inhabitants are fully and accurately stated and are identical with the records of said meeting now in my possession as clerk of said town, so far as said records relate to said by-laws.

LITTLEFIELD'S

Constitutional Cough Syrup

For Children.

BEDFORD, Sept. 20th, 1887.

MR. C. B. LITTLEFIELD,

Dear Sir:—I wish to say for the benefit of those who are troubled with coughs and colds that they will find a sure cure in the Constitutional Cough Syrup. I have a family of nine children, from three to twenty-one years old, and all have used the Syrup for coughs and colds, and it has never failed to cure them. It is the best cough syrup for children I ever knew, as I have never had to employ a doctor for these diseases, but have cured them with the Constitutional Cough Syrup.

A Summer Romance.

We stood in the moonlight's tender glow,
And I thought her the daintiest girl
That ever had lived. And I loved her so!
She had set my brain awhirl!
For she was charmingly gay that night
As we stood on the shore in the soft moonlight,
And never a soul was nigh.

So I whispered low: "I love you, dear!
And you thrill me through and through!
As I look in your eyes, in the moonlight here,
It is all that I can do
To keep from straining your close to me now
And kissing your eyes and your lips—I vow
It's hard to be good!" said I.

Then she looked up at me with a roguish glance,
And a light was in her eyes
That made my blood leap and the whole world dance
In a rapture of sweet surprise.
"I suppose it is hard," she roguishly said,
Then, softly, and turning away her head,
She added: "What makes you try?"

A woman's hand. How beautifully molded! how faultless in symmetry! how soft, and white, and yielding, and oh! how much of gentle memory its pressue conveys. Yet we don't like it in our hair.—N. Y. Shoe and Leather Reporter.

When Japeth was arranging the animals in the ark he put the daw's cage immediately over the wolf's kennel. His father discovered it and remarked: "This will never do Japh. You know we must 'keep the wolf from the door'."—Yonkers Gazette.

No Confidence in that Doctor.—Wife (to third husband)—"If you feel so ill, John, I think we had better send for my old family physician." Third Husband (somewhat hastily)—"No, my dear, I would prefer to send for some one else."—Texas Siftings.

"Are there any ruins around here, Mr. Dactylambler?" asked the tourist. "I should say so, "replied the heartbroken poet. "Go down to the office of the Weekly Wrongfoat and see how they printed my poem on "The Dying Summer."—Bardette.

"I wish that woman would stay out of here," remarked the grocer. "She invariably carries away a handful of sugar for a sample." "Then," said his hearer thoughtfully, "you are not in favor of the sugar-beat industry, are you?"—Washington Critic.

"Say, did you ever hear of a barking horse?"

"No, nor anybody else."

"Yes, sir, our grocer has one, at least his horse barked one of our maple shade trees till I am afraid it will die."—Danville Breeze.

Young Mr. Sissy (to his pretty cousin)—I say, Maude, how did my song, "Home Again, from a Foreign Shore," seem to impress the company? Pretty cousin—Well, some of them, Charley, looked as if they were sorry that you had got back.—New York Sun.

The little folks have ideas of their own. A family party on a horse car was suddenly disturbed by the absence of the head of the house. "Where did your papa go to?" asked the mother of her four-years-old. "He is on the front piazza smoking a cigar."—Hartford Post.

N. H. (newly married)—"Well, good-by, old man. Come up some night and take dinner with us." C. B.—"Thanks, I will. What hour do you have it?" N. H. (meditatively)—"Oh, sometimes at 6 and sometimes at 7, and then again at half-past 7, and, by Jove, sometimes not till half-past 8."—Life.

Young Mrs. Popinjay (at market for the first time)—"Are you sure this chicken is not an old hen? It feels very tough."

Marketman—"I can assure you ma'am, that fowl is very young. (Opening the bill of the biped.) See, it hasn't a single tooth yet." Mrs. Popinjay takes the hen.—Burlington Free Press.

Wife—"A box came to-day, John, addressed to you."

Husband—"Did you open it?"

Wife—"No."

Husband—"Well, I wish you had. It may be one of those dinged infernal machines."—The Epoch.

Guest—"Have you a fire escape in this house?"

Landlord—"Two of 'em, sir.'

Guest—"I thought so. The fire all escaped from my room last night, and I came near freezing."—Lawrence American.

Mose Schaumburg (to his clerk)—"Mishter Silverstone, I vish you vould schmile a leedle."

The Only Remedy for

Contagious Blood Poison.

Mr. D. B. Adams of Union, South Carolina, writes: "I was afflicted with a terrible case of blood poison for about thirteen months. I was treated by the best physicians, and used various remedies, but received no substantial relief. I finally tried the Swift Specific, and about four bottles cured me sound and well."

Col. R. H. Kleser, editor and proprietor of the Opelika, Ala., Times, under date of August 3, 1887, writes: "When a young man, through indiscretion, I contracted a terrible disease which has stuck to me for years. Some five or six years since I was troubled with pains, so as to make it difficult for me to walk. Having advertised the S. S. S. in my paper for several years, I concluded I would try it to see if there was any efficacy in the medicine. I commenced using it according to directions and used half a dozen bottles. I was once at a way station, and getting left, I walked the seven miles and have never felt any return of the old malady. After experiencing the good effects I must say I am satisfied with the result. I am sixty-eight years of age and I feel now like a young man and can go to the case when necessary and set up from six to eight thousand ems without any inconvenience. I send you this without solicitation."

Mr. F. Woehl, 211 North Avenue, Chicago, under date of June 12, 1887, writes: "I deem it my duty to thank you for the cure I received from your excellent medicine. I contracted a very severe case of blood poisoning about two years ago. Hearing of your medicine I went to a drug store, the proprietor of which persuaded me to buy a preparation of his own, which he said was a sure cure. I used six bottles of his stuff and grew worse all the time. At last I got disgusted and despaired of a cure. I met a friend who told me that your medicine cured him. I went to the same druggist and demanded your medicine. He reluctantly sold me twelve bottles, and I am now perfectly cured. I write this for the benefit of sufferers, to prevent their being deceived by false representations. I thank you again for the benefit derived from your medicine."

Dr. J. N. Cheney, a prominent physician, residing in Ellaville, Schley county, Georgia, in a letter recounting the infallible success he has in curing contagious blood poisoning cases in his extensive practice, writes: "Those who know the almost inevitable, permanently dangerous effects of mercury will welcome your discovery of S. S. S. as a boon to humanity. The medical profession, is coming slowly, and in some cases secretly, to the use of S. S. S. in cases of blood disorder. Of course a medicine that cures poisoning in its worst form must purify the blood of ever disorder."

8 PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGES IN KANSAS.

During the next 20 days we shall give our customers 8% on any money they may send us for investments we have for sale. We have on hand First Mortgages and applications for money on first mortgage loans, mostly upon 160 acre farms, amounts ranging from $250 to $500. We have also mortgages in amounts $1000 to $20,000 at 7% which we offer. How much money can you furnish us for these loans? They are A1 security. The stringency in the money market enables us to cut down amounts applied for in each case to an amount that is safe beyond a doubt. Now is the time to get a nice line of small gilt edge loans. MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer as demonstrations of the unequalled excellency of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century. A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

The News and the Truth
—IN THE—
Springfield Republican.

The Springfield Republican, established in 1824 by Samuel Bowles, is universally recognized as one of the leading newspapers in America. It publishes the most thorough and comprehensive reports of New England news, and ably represents the best New England ideas. It is particularly energetic in collecting the local news of Western Massachusetts and the neighboring parts of other states, Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire, and presents a full daily record of the life of this region such as can be found in no other paper.

It is vigorous, but reasonable in the expression of its editorial opinions, which are progressive, independent and liberal. It is devoted to the interests of the whole people rather than to those of any party. Recognizing the good and condemning the evil represented in the chief political bodies as now constituted, it gives its support to the side that offers the largest measure of advancement toward better, purer government and happier, more equitable social conditions.

It deals with all the vital issues of the day and offers its readers abundant and interesting examples of good literature.

The Daily Republican is sold for $8 a year, $2 a quarter, 70 cents a month, 3 cents a copy.

The Sunday Republican is $2 a year, 50 cents a quarter, 5 cents a copy.

The Weekly Republican is $1 a year, 60 cents for 6 months; 10 cents a month for trial subscriptions.

An Extraordinary Offer!
Two Weekly Papers
ONE YEAR FOR $1.25.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLICAN, a superior, carefully edited news and family journal, and THE FARM AND FIRESIDE, a popular story and agricultural weekly published by the Toronto (Canada) Mail will both be sent to any address one year for $1.25.

Mrs. L. E. Steele, of Yreka, Siskiyou Co., Cal., writing under date of Feb. 3d, 1887, says: "I sent to Chicago for Dr. R. C. Flower's Brain and Nerve Pills; have taken only a portion of a bottle, and feel like a new person already. They have worked like magic on my system. I was unable to do anything when I commenced taking them; now I can work all day long."

Mrs. M. P. Outt, No. 177 Shonnard St., Syracuse, N. Y., in writing for Nerve Pills and Liver Sanative, says: "I called on a friend this morning, who wants your medicines. She said, 'Mrs. Outt, I want some of the medicine you have taken; I think it has almost raised you from death, and it certainly will help me.' She was so surprised to see me walk into her house. It is a longer distance than I have walked for a year. No one but the good Father knows how I have suffered for the past two years, and how thankful I am for the benefit I have received from your remedies. I feel that when I first began to take them, I took the first step toward a cure. I cannot express myself any better than to say it was like letting the sun shine on a plant that was dying for its genial rays."

Every bottle of Dr. R. C. Flower's Brain and Nerve Pills contains one hundred pills. Price, $1. For sale by all druggists.

A Christmas Gathering.

The Christmas time has come again, the gladsome Christmas time;
The evergreens are berried bright, the boughs are white with rime;
From every steeple far and near the joy-bells peal ing ring—
The voice of man's good-will to man speaks forth in everything.

Warm glow the lights by cottage hearth, in lordly mansions high,
And many a tale of love is told 'neath frosty, starlit sky,
As merrily the sleigh-bells ring and silvery laughter sweet
Blends with the crunching of the snow beneath the ponies' feet.

Here strains of joyous music come from yonder crowded hall,
And sounds of mirth and twinkling feet proclaim the Christmas ball;
And glowing cheeks and glittering gems and brighter eyes are there—
Tones of manhood, childhood's grace and maiden's blushes fair.

The mistletoe hangs coy aloft, its polished beads of white
Mixed with the laurel and the bay, and the scarlet berries bright
Of glistening holly, whilst the yew peeps graceful from beneath
The glowing mass, and over all is twined the ivy wreath.

The little ten-year old cavalier assumes a mannish air,
The six-year-old throws, conscious, back her wealth of golden hair;
A riper beauty sheds her smile a white-haired knight upon,
Whilst younger manhood envying turns and looks, half-jealous, on.

So Winter, once again made young, bethinks him of his Spring;
And Spring looks up in Winter's face whilst youth is on the wing,
Forgetting, even as she smiles, old Time another pace
Hath travel'd forward and hath touched, unseen, her winsome face.

Ring on, ring on, O Christmas bells, peal out upon the air;
Grasp hands, O stalwart, bearded men; smile on O maidens fair;
Laugh, darling, bright-hair'd little ones, in your white blossoms prime,
Pay royal homage, one and all, to happy Christmas time!

The time of mutual good-will, the season to forgive,
Forget we by-gone injuries, but kindness let live,
Let love strew flowers o'er the young, whilst friendship cheers the old,
Erase the black lines of the past—the future write in gold —London Society.

JOSEPH GOLDING'S CHRISTMAS.

It was very strange, thought old Joseph Golding, that he couldn't be master of his own mind. He had lived a great many years, and neither remorse nor memory had ever been in the habit of disturbing him; but now it seemed to him as if the very foundations of his life were breaking up. He was well through with his day's work—he had dined comfortably—he sat in an easy chair in a luxurious drawing room, whose crimson hangings shut out the still cold of the December afternoon—but he had nothing to do but to enjoy himself. Mr. Golding liked to enjoy himself at this season as much as others did, for it was Chrismas Eve. What though he was in the habit of spending it solitarily?—he liked solitude.

For many a years on Christmas Eve he had sat balancing in his mind the great accounts presented in his ledgers, the accumulating coffers at his banker's, the strokes of business he would make in future. Not so now. The year was drawing to a close: some intruding voice kept whispering that in like manner so was his career. He could not put it from him, try as he would. The voice reminded him of a coming time when his life's work would be done—even as his day's work is done now—when he would be ready to sit down in the evening and look over the balance sheet of his deeds, good and evil. Curiously the old days came trooping in slow procession before him. And he had been able to forget them for so very long!

His dead wife. He had not loved her much when she was with him, but how vivid was his memory of her now! He could see her moving round the house, noiseless as a shadow, never intruding on him after he had once or twice repulsed her gruffly, but going on her own meek, still ways, with her face growing whiter every day. He began to understand, as he looked back, why her strength had failed; and she had been ready, when her baby came, to float out on the tide and let it drift into God's haven. She had had enough to eat and drink, but he saw now that he had left her heart to starve. Heaven! what a hard man he had been! He seemed to see her white, still face, as he looked at it the last time, with the dumb reproach frozen on it; the eyes that would never plead vainly any more, closed for ever.

He recalled how passionately the three days' old baby had cried in another room just at that moment, moving all the people gathered together for the funeral with a thrill of pity for the poor little motherless morsel. She was a passionate, wilful baby, all through her baby-hood; he remembered that. She wanted—missed without knowing what the lack was—the love and sustenance which her mother would have given her, and protested against fate with all the might of her infant lungs. But as soon as she grew old enough to understand how useless it was, she had grown quiet, too; just like her mother. He recalled her, all through her girlhood, a shy, still girl, always obedient and submissive, but never drawing very near him. Why? Because he would have repulsed her as he repulsed her mother. He could see it now. It was very strange these facts should come back to him to-day, and their naked truth with them. He had been a cold, hard, ungenial man, without sympathy for any one human being; absorbed utterly in the pursuit of money-making. And so the child, Amy, had grown up without him.

But suddenly, when she was eighteen, the old, passionate spirit that had made her cry so when a baby must have awakened again, he thought; for she fell in love then, and wished to marry. To marry in defiance of his wishes. He remembered her standing proudly before him after one of their quarrels, where he had been harsh and bitter, and abusive of the man she wanted to call husband. She had borne in silence the reproach of herself; but not of him who had become to her as her best existence. Her words came back to the old man now.

"Father, do you know anything against Harry Church?"

"Yes," he answered wrathfully; "I know that he is a poor man, and that he cannot keep a wife as a daughter of mine must be kept."

"Anything else, father?" looking him steadily in the eye.

"No, that's enough," he had thundered. "I'll tell you, besides, that if you marry him my doors will never open to you again, never."

He met with a will as strong as his own, that time. She did marry him, and went away with him from her father's house. Mr. Golding had known the day the wedding was to take place, and disdained to stop it. He washed his hands of Harry Church, and of Amy, his wife. She wrote home afterwards, over and over again, but Mr. Golding sent all the letters back unopened. Subsequent to that, they dissappeared from there; and he had never heard what became of them. It was at least ten years ago now. It seemed very strange that these things should have come back to-night to haunt him—and with a wild remorse, a pitying regret. He had done nothing to recall them. Could it be his sense of failing strength that brought them?—if so, what sort of anguish might he not look for as he drew nearer and nearer to the ending! He began to wish that he knew what had been in those rejected letters—whether Amy had been suffering for anything that money could supply. The next thought that struck him was, why he had opposed the marriage so virulently. It is true that Harry Church had been but a clerk in his own employ; but he was a well-educated gentleman, and would rise with time. Faithful, intelligent, perserving, respected—but poor. In that last word lay the head and front of Harry Church's offending. He, Joseph Golding, was rich then; he was far richer now; but he could not help asking it, what good were his riches bringing him? He could not carry it along with him. All in a moment—he saw it clearly—the dreadful truth stood naked and bare; his life and his object had been mistaken ones.

"All alone! all alone!" he kept saying to himself, in a sort of vague self-pity. "I've toiled and worked for nothing!"

But during this time, even now, as he sat there, a message of love was on its way to him. Perhaps Heaven had been preparing his heart to receive it.

He heard a ring at the door bell. Heard it without paying attention to it. Rings were nothing to him; people did not come on business to his residence, and of visitors he expected none. Down went his head lower and lower with its weight of thought.

Meanwhile two people were admitted into the hall below; a man and a little girl. The man took off the child's warm cloak and hood, and she stood revealed, a dainty, delicate creature of some eight years old; her golden curls drooping softly round her face, with her large blue eyes and its cherry lips. The servant who admitted them, not knowing what to make of this, called Mr. Golding's housekeeper, old Mrs. Osgood. The latter went into a tremor as she came forward and looked into the child's face.

"It's Miss Amy's child!" she exclaimed to the man, nervously. "I couldn't mistake the likeness."

"Miss Amy that was," he answered. "Mrs. Harry Church she has been this many a year."

"I know. It's as much as my place is worth to admit any child of hers."

"You are Mrs. Osgood," exclaimed the little girl. "Mamma said I should be sure to see you."

"Hear the blessed lamb! And so she remembers me?"

"She talks of you often; she says you were always kind to her; nobody but you loved her."

"Well, I did love her. The old house has never been the same since she went out of it. What's you name, my pretty one?"

"Amy."

"Amy!" repeated the housekeeper, lifting up her hands, as if there were some wonder in it.

"And mamma said you would let me go up alone to grandpa."

"And so you shall," decided Mrs. Osgood, after a minute's hesitation. "I won't stand in the way of it, let the master be as mad as he will with me. He is up in the drawing room, all by himself.

The man sat down to wait and the child went up alone.

Opening the door, she went softly in, not speaking; perhaps the stern looking old man, sitting there with bent head, awed her to silence. Joseph Golding, waking up from his reverie, saw a letter held out to him. With a singular quickening of pulse he recognized his daughter's writing.

She had waited all these silent years, she told him, because she was determined never to write again until they were rich enough for him to know that she did not write for any need of his help. They had passed ten years in the West, and Heaven had prospered them. Her husband was a rich man now, and she wanted from him only his love—wanted only, that death should not come between them, and either of them go to her mother's side without having been reconciled to each other.

"How did this come here?—who brought it?" demanded Mr. Golding, in his usual imperious manner.

"I did, grandpa."

He sprang up at the soft timid voice, as if some fright took him, and stared at the lovely vision, standing there like a spirit on his hearthstone, with her white face and gleaming golden hair. Was it real? Where was he? Who could this child be! But as he looked the likeness flashed upon him—and he grew hungry to clasp her to him. It was the little Amy of the old days grown into beauty—for Amy had never been so wondrously fair as this child.

"Come here, my child; don't be afraid. Tell me what you name is."

"Amy, grandpa."

Another Amy! Grandpa! He felt sobs rising up in his heart with a great flood of emotion; but he choked them back.

"What have they told you about me?" he rejoined, after a long pause. "Have they bid you hate me?"

"They have always told me that you were far away where the sun rose; and if I were good they would bring me to see you some day. Every night I say in my prayers, 'God bless papa and mamma, and God bless grandpa'."

"Why didn't they bring you? What made them let you come alone?"

"Mamma sent me with John to give you the letter," was the simple answer. "The carriage is at the gate, waiting for me."

"Who is John?"

"Papa's servant."

"And where are they staying?"

"At the hotel. We only got here this morning."

Mrs. Osgood, hovering in the hall, looked on in wonder. Her master was coming down stairs, calling for his hat and coat, and leading the child. He got in the carriage with her and it drove away. Mr. Golding was wondering vaguely whether it were real.

They arrived at last, and the child led him in, opening a door at the end of a long corridor. She spoke cheeringly.

"Mammy, here's grandpa. He said he would come back with me."

Mr. Golding's head went off in a swim. Advancing weakness tells upon a person in such moments as these. He sat down and there were Amy's arms—his own Amy's—about his neck. Which of the two sobbed the most could not be told. Why had he never know what he lost through all those vanished years?

"Father, are we reconciled at last?"

"I don't know, my daughter; until you tell me if you forgive me."

"There should be no talk about forgiveness," she said. "You went according to you own opinion of what was right. And perhaps I was to blame, too. Father, it is enough that God has brought us together in peace. I thought that no one could resist my little Amy, least of all her grandpa."

He looked up. The child stood by, silently; the firelight glittering on her golden hair, her face shining strangely sweet. He put out his arms and drew her into them, close—where no child, not even his own, had ever nestled before. Oh, how much he had missed in life!—he knew it now. He felt her clinging hold around his neck—her kisses dropped upon his face like the pitying dew from heaven; and he—was it himself, or another in his place?

"Father, see."

Amy's voice had a clear, full ring in it. Her married life had been a happy one. Mr. Golding turned at the call.

"Here are Harry and the boys waiting to speak to you," she said, in a less assured tone.

He shook his son-in-law's hand heartily. Old feud, old things, were over now, and all was become new. In his heart, he had always liked Harry Church. Then he looked at the two boys, brave, merry little fellows, of whom he may be proud.

Explanations ensued. Fortune had favored Mr. Church; they had come back for good and were already looking out for a house.

"No house but mine," interrupted Joseph Golding. "It will want a tenent when I am gone. You must come home to-morrow."

"To-morrow is Christmas Day," said his daughter, doubtingly.

"All the better. If Christmas was never kept in my house, it shall be now. I shall not live to see another, Amy."

She looked up at the changed, thin face, and could not contradict him. Some one going to their Western home had told them how Joseph Golding was breaking; the news had caused them to return prematurely. Amy said to her husband that if her father died, unreconciled to her, she should be filled with remorse forever.

"You will come home to-morrow, all of you," repeated Mr. Golding. "And mind, Amy, you do not go away again."

"But—if the children should be too much for you, father!"

"When they are, I'll tell you," he said, with a touch of his former gruffness. "The old house is large enough.

He went out, and found his way to the shops—open to the last on Christmas Eve—looking for Christmas gifts. New work for him!—but he entered into it earnestly. Perambulating the streets like a bewildered Santa Claus, he went home ladened with books, and toys, and jewels, and bon-bons. Mrs. Osgood lifted her hands, and thought the end of the world must be coming.

"Help me put these things away, Mrs. Osgood. Don't stare as if you were moon-struck. And, look here—There'll be company to dinner to-morrow. Mind you send in a good one."

"The best that was ever seen on a table—if it's for them I think it is for."

"Well, it is. Miss Amy's coming home again."

"Heaven be praised, sir! The house has been a dull one since she left it."

"They are all coming. They will not go away again, Mrs. Osgood. If you want more servants, you can get them."

"it's the best Christmas greeting you could have given me, master."

And they came. Amy and Amy's husband and the pretty boys were there; and best of all, the sweet little girl with golden hair, sitting next to grandpa. It was too happy a party for loud mirth. And among them Joseph Golding saw, or imagined he saw, another face, over which almost thirty years ago, he had watched the grave-sod piled—a face sad and wishful no longer, but bright with a strange glory. Close by him she seemed to stand; and he heard, or fancied he heard, a whisper from her parted lips, though it might have come only from his own heart: "Peace on earth and good will toward men!"

Freight train No. 35 on the New London Northern Railroad accidentally collided with freight No. 27 near South Vernon Wednesday afternoon. Several cars of the latter train became detached and remained stationary on the track, thereby causing the accident to the approaching train. The locomotive attached to No. 35 was badly smashed, while the collision caused the derailment of several cars on No. 27. The accident caused a delay of all passenger trains for a brief time. No one was injured.

Christmas at the state primary school will be unusually well observed. The celebration of the event began Thursday evening with an appropriate entertainment by the children in which "Santa Claus" took a prominent part. Through the liberality of friends in Palmer an oyster dinner will be served Sunday at 12 o'clock, while in the evening a concert will be given. The children will have roast turkey, squash, turnips and potatoes for dinner on Monday. The Christmas tree will be stripped of its fruit in the morning for the small children, and again in the afternoon for the larger boys and girls.

A meeting of the citizens for the formation of a Democratic club will be held Tuesday evening, Jan. 3d, at 7.30 o'clock in Hibernian Hall. The work of the proposed club will be principally to secure new members and to invite citizens of the various political beliefs to join the ranks of Democracy, while the numerous issues which are expected to arise prior to the forthcoming town meeting will also be considered, and action taken by the club in a manner which is deemed advisable and for the best interests of the town. The local Democrats are quite enthusiastic at present, and the indications are that the meeting will be largely attended.

Howard's Lyceum Theatre company has been playing at the Park street rink this week, and as is usually the case through the holiday season, has been greeted with small houses. "Woman against Woman," "Phœnix," "Tried and True," and "Galley Slave" have been given. The company as a whole is excellent—much above the average ten cent combination—but Messrs. Morton, Gage, Herrington and Wilson, and Miss Rose, Miss Herrington and Miss Russell deserve special mention. They are always cast for the right parts, and take them well. They will not play to-night or to-morrow, the attractions of the holidays proving greater than those of the stage for theater-goers.

A fair audience witnessed the polo game at Park street rink Saturday evening between the Palmers and Springfields. The Palmers were assisted by McCarty and Crawford, two players of the Gilbertville team, who managed to do some very effective work for the local club, which captured the first goal, and after a heated contest proved victorious. The score stood: Palmers, 4, Springfields, 3. Time of game, 55 minutes. After the above occurred the two mile race between Thomas Parker of Palmer and John McCarty of Gilbertville, the latter the champion short distance skater of Worcester county. The race was an exciting one at intervals, and close. McCarty won by two feet. Time 5 minutes and 10 seconds. Peter Parker and Martin Rooney of Palmer were referees for both events. The next game of polo will be between the Palmers and Gilbertvilles at Park street rink on the evening of the 31st.

If the fathers, mothers, and friends of our high school scholars know how much pleasure and profit would be added to their school life by a piano, we are sure no lack of money would stand between the young people and their desires. The privileges of the school cost parents not a single dollar. Can they not afford to be generous in this matter? both those who now have children in the school, and those whose children are soon to enter? The lecture course ought to yield a handsome surplus. The first entertainment of the course will be given next Tuesday night at the Congregational church when Geo. Parsons Gilman will give an illustrated lecture, entitled "The Land of the Nile." The lecturer hardly needs an introduction, and the views will be the finest ever seen in Palmer. Tickets for the course of five entertainments are $1 single tickets 30 cents. The sittings in the lecture course will be assigned by lot; the drawing taking place at 7.30 Monday evening at the high school room. Ticket holders who are unable to be present will have seats assigned them, and may exchange the tickets they have for marked ones at the church, Tuesday evening.

STORES DECKED IN HOLIDAY ATTIRE.

The holiday display in the various stores is superior to that of preceding years. The decorations are unique and pretty, and the articles in the show windows attract the attention of the pedestrian as he passes up and down Main and Central streets. All the merchants have exercised great judgment in the selection of their goods, and have endeavored to exhibit a stock equal to that seen in cities. The holiday trade has been comparatively brisk, and at intervals the stores have been crowded with people, all eager to purchase some souvenir to tender to a relative or a friend, while the "best girls" and "best fellows" have not been forgotten. Most of the stores have been compelled to increase the force of clerks in order to supply the demands of customers. The fact that a good business has been done and the stock decreased by the purchasers, tends to make the average merchant greet you with a sunny countenance.

LIEUT. L. L. MERRICK.

Mr. Editor: In the report of the doings of L. L. Merrick Post, G. A. R., in your issue of November 25, relating to L. L. Merrick, there were one or two errors. Mr. Merrick, from whom the post derives its name, was the son of Lathrop and Sarah Hyde Merrick, and was born in Monson June 8, 1829, on what is known as the Bates place, near Mrs. Charles Fay's, and when quite young came to Palmer to live, with his parents. He prepared for college at Monson Academy, and graduated from Amherst in 1860. From there he went to East Windsor, Ct., and remained one year, going from there to the Union Theological Seminary at New York, where he was when the war broke out. He was licensed to preach as a Congregational minister, not a Baptist, as stated, but was never ordained. His home at the time of his enlistment in the army was in Palmer, and from Palmer he enlisted in Co. E. 36 Reg., under Capt. S. C. Warriner of Monson, now of Springfield. He was three times wounded and taken prisoner, making his escape the first two times and reaching the Union lines in safety. The third time he was taken prisoner was Sept. 30, 1664, after being wounded in front of Petersburg, Va, these wounds causing his death. He was taken to Petersburg Oct. 3, and to Richmond, Va., Oct. 4. He was then exchanged and sent down the James river on the hospital boat "George Leary," dying on board Oct. 7. His remains were buried at Bermuda Hundreds, but in December following were brought to Monson and buried in the family lot in the cemetery there by his brother, G. F. Merrick, now of Lawrence.

FORMATION OF THE WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS LEAGUE.

A base ball convention was held in the district court room here yesterday afternoon for the purpose of forming the Western Massachusetts league for the season of 1888. The meeting was called to order at 3 o'clock by T. W. Kenefick, who was elected chairman, John F. Luman being chosen secretary. Four teams were represented by delegates, and it was voted to admit the following teams, which shall compose the league: Palmers, Thorndikes, Three Rivers, Ludlows, Warrens and Monsons. A stipulation was made to the effect that the two latter teams, which were not represented, shall pay the required entrance fee prior to May 1, 1888, in order that they may join the league. The following officers were then chosen: President, D. F. Holden, Palmer; secretary and treasurer, J. F. Luman, Thorndike. As regards a board of directors, it was voted that each team shall appoint a director, and that all of the directors will compose the board of the league. The league entrance fee was fixed at $10 for each team, and that said sum shall be paid to the treasurer prior to May 1. It was thought advisable to offer a suitable prize to the club that wins the championship, and it was decided to purchase as first prize a fine silver bat, while the second prize will be a set of foul flags, and the following committee was chosen to procure the trophies: J. H. Staples, Thorndike; D. F. Holden, Palmer; T. M. Clifford, Ludlow. The following committee was appointed to draft the by-laws of the league and to confer with the president and directors relative to their adoption: W. W. Thayer, Thorndike; George Phillips, Ludlow; J. Horan, Three Rivers; Martin Rooney, Palmer. The above committee will report at an adjourned meeting to be held in the district court room February 4th, at 6 o'clock p. m. The schedule of games will be arranged about May 1st, and the season will open in the vicinity of May 15th.

PALMER SCHOOLS INSPECTED.

During the first half of this week Mr. Walton, agent for the state board of education, visited the town in his official capacity. He visited 23 out of the 27 schools in town, and Wednesday afternoon addressed the assembled teachers in the high school room. The agent had some criticisms to offer, chiefly as regards the equipment, or rather lack of equipment, which the schools enjoy for carrying on their work. The town was commended for the good state of repair in which it kept its school property, and congratulated upon possessing a body of school officers and teachers so intelligent and enthusiastic in their work. The bulk of Mr. Walton's address was devoted to an exposition of the most advanced methods of teaching, as applied particularly to primary work. The elements of the new education may be put into a few maxims: Study things, not about things; never let the pupil use a word until the idea for which it stands is familar; never teach the young child letters, teach him words; make the known its basis for acquiring the unknown; practice, work, ability to do, are better than rules and precipts; let the pupil learn to do by doing; drill, drill, drill, is the teachers' watchword; teach first, last, and all the time the English language. The speaker seemed to think the ability to write correctly a business letter, grasp the elements of a mathematical problem and combine them into a solution, to clearly grasp an idea and state it in vigorous English, was of more importance than to have boxed the whole circle of theoretical knowledge. Truly the children of to day have fallen on a golden age. The stern days of the pedagogue with his long rules, which were first learned and then understood, if possible, with his problems which must be solved by the rule which was committed, which possibly may be remembered and of whose meaning the scholar possibly had some dim apprehenson, has given place to the patient, hard-working teacher, who compels the pupil to understand, and then he doesn't have to commit; who removes every difficulty from the path of the struggling pupil, who in every deed leads his flock forth into green pastures and beside still waters. The pursuit of knowledge in these modern days has become a delightful excursion, in which the pet lambs of the household simply gambol over the fields, plucking the intelligent flowers and fruitage which the teacher, with infinite pains, has placed within their easy grasp. How much wiser ought they to be than their fathers'

CHRISTMAS AT THE CHURCHES.

All the churches in the village will observe Christmas this year in an appropriate manner. The fact that Christmas and Sunday occur simultaneously will make the event of more than interest. Much time has been consumed the past few days in gathering evergreens, ferns and other foliage with which to decorate the altars and interiors of the various churches, which will undoubtedly present a very handsome appearance. At the Second Congregational church Sunday morning an appropriate sermon will be preached by the pastor, Rev. Howard W. Pope. The concert by the children, which was previously assigned for Sunday evening, has been deferred until New Year's. This programme will be presented by the choir, under the direction of Wilbur F. Miller:

MORNING SERVICE.

Opening Hymn—"Joy to the World."
Anthem—Venite. E flat.....Dudley Buck
Response Service—By Pastor and Choir.....Mason
Response.....Trowbridge
Anthem—"Angels Bring to us Great Joy"....Gouch
Anthem—"Hear them tell their Wondrous Story .....Bailey

The evening service will consist of a praise service by choir and congregation, entitled "The Pilgrim's Progress in Song," at 7 o'clock.

Christmas eve will be recognized at St. Paul's Universalist church with a supper for the children in the parlors. Aside from the above there will be a tree loaded with presents, which are to be distributed among the members of the Sunday school. Sunday morning Rev. F. W. Betts will preach a Christmas sermon, while the following is the musical programme to be rendered by the choir:

Anthem—"Let us go to Bethlehem".....Hatton
Soprano Solo—"Ave Maria".....Millard
Mrs. Jennette Wallace.
Te Deum, b minor, No. 5.....Dudley Buck
Alto Solo—"He was Despised".....Messiah
Mrs. H. E. Huntley.
Christmas Hymn.

At the Sabbath school concert in the evening the choir will assist as follows:

Opening Anthem—"Rejoice the Heart"
Tenor Solo—..... ..Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise
G. H. Howard.
Baritone Solo.....Schroeder
George W. Ely.

A fine musical programme will be heard at St. Thomas' Catholic church Sunday morning, where "Peter's mass in D" will be given by the choir, with orchestral accompaniment.

At the Baptist church there will be a Christmas tree to-morrow evening, and Sunday morning Rev. Mr. Weeks will preach a sermon to the children. The special musical programme will be:

Anthem—"Angels Bring to us Great Joy...."White
Song—"The Star of Bethlehem".....Adams

BRIMFIELD.

The farm of J. A. Elliott is advertised to be sold at auction January 21, by the mortgagee.

They will have their Christmas tree this evening at the town hall. The Methodists also have their Christmas tree and exercises this evening. The Congregational Sabbath-school have a supper in the ladies' parlor to-morrow evening for the children, with the usual distribution of presents. The Sabbath-school at the Congregational church will reorganize next Sabbath. They have a Christmas concert Sunday evening.

LUDLOW.

A series of meetings has been held in the Ludlow school house, which closed with a praise service Tuesday evening. The attendance has been good and considerable interest awakened.

The Congregational church at the Center holds its annual meeting next Thursday. A dinner will be provided in the chapel at noon, to which all are invited. Letters are being written to the absent members requesting that they send an expression of their interest if they cannot be present. The past year has been one of more than usual religious activity. The one hundreth anniversary of this church comes in 1889.

The Fisk Jubilee Singers are engaged to give a concert at the Congregational church at Ludlow Center next Friday evening. This is the original company which is now in its 17th season of success, singing the old slave melodies. They have been all over Europe and America, and touched with their pathetic songs the hearts of all classes, from the king on his throne to the humblest toiler. This is a rare opportunity for the people of the region to enjoy one of the very best entertainments. The price of admission is put within the means of all, and a large discount is made to those who purchase their tickets before the date of the concert.

The town meeting disposed of its two articles in a way that must have been satisfactory to all. The red bridge matter is left in the hands of the selectmen, and as in their opinion the bridge is perfectly safe for the present no appropriation was asked, it being thought that it can be repaired in the spring or early summer. The element in favor of doing up and cleaning out the illicit liquor selling which has of late been going on in the village was very decisive, and a unanimous vote passed appropriated $1000 to be used, so much of it as is needed, by the selectmen to prosecute all offenders. Ludlow always has excluded liquor selling from its borders, and does not propose to change its past record. It would be well for all to know this and act accordingly.

THORNDIKE.

Howard's Lyceum Theater Co. will occupy Union Hall for one week, commencing next Monday. The company is one of the best on the road, and should be given good houses.

The rink will soon be open for skating again.

William Buffington and Charles Bradway will be pleased to show goods to any of their friends at Geo. L. Jenks's store during the holidays.

Geo. L. Jenks had the front show window of his store broken last Saturday evening by some boys who were bent on doing mischief.

S. F. Cushman has donated two handsome chandeliers, one for the principals room and the other for the room of the perceptress at the academy.

George Aldrich expects to make it decidedly interesting for owners of local horse flesh with the new stepper he purchased of Dell Needham last week.

The academy will close for the holidays Friday night, and will not commence again until Thursday morning. Principal Dana Dustan goes to Weston to spend his holidays.

Photograph Artist Loren Squier started for Florida Wednesday, taking his camera with him, and when he returns will probably show some fine views of the land of flowers.

The December 16th issue of Tobacco at New York contained an excellent article about Charles E Fuller of Springfield, of the cigar firm of Towne, Fuller & Co., a former Monson boy.

There will be a sociable at the academy next Friday evening, for the older students, and the alumni for the past ten years, are especially invited to be present. The younger students will have a social later in the term.

Lyman Miller's horse took a lively spin down Main street Monday evening. At Central Block he collided with a team belonging to Alonzo Helden, smashing the sleigh somewhat, but was fortunatly stopped before going further.

At the regular meeting of Day Spring Lodge Wednesday evening the following officers were elected: Charles Buffington, W. M.; R. F. Bradway, S. W.; Geo. W. Johnson, J. W.; Dr. Geo. E. Foller, treasurer; George L. Fuller, secretary.

The Linophilian Society was re-organized at the academy last Friday evening, and the following officers chosen: President, Walter Coyle; vice president, Clara Clark; secretary, Stanley Hobbs; Treasurer, Julia Underwood; musical director, Nellie O Leary; janitor, Robert Shaw. The society meets semi-monthly in the academy, and start with a membership of 16.

Thieves visited Rev. J. F. Lee's barn about 2 o'clock last Friday morning, and secured a coat and overcoat belonging to the hostler. St. Patrick's church was also broken into, but nothing of importance taken. Suspicion pointed to a man supposed to be a tramp that was set to work by Fr. Lee, and an officer was sent to look him up, which he succeeded in doing, finding his man in Spencer. He was taken before the district court at Palmer and sentenced to six months in the house of correction.

Christmas will be observed at the M. E. church, as follows: On Saturday evening at 6 o'clock there will be a supper served to the children, and at 6.30 there will be a Christmas tree. Saturday morning there will be preaching by the pastor, Rev. J. H Emerson, and a Christmas concert in the evening by the children. At the Universalist church, preaching in the morning by the pastor, Rev. I. A. Priest, from the text, "What must I do to be saved?" and a Christmas concert in the evening. At the Congregational church there will be preaching in the evening by Rev. F. S. Hatch, pastor, and a Christmas concert by the Sunday school in the evening. The Christmas services at St. Patrick's consisting of Farmer's mass, a sermon and benediction, will occur at 6 30 a. m.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH—ANNUAL MEETING.

At the annual meeting of the First Congregational church Monday evening these officers were elected: F. E. Morris, clerk; E. F. Morris, treasurer; C. W. Holmes, Jr., auditor; E. F. Morris, deacon for six years; suprentendent of sabbath school, E. F Morris; assistant suprentendent. Rev. James Tufts; secretary, of sabbath school, L. C. Flynt; librarian, T, D. Cushman; standing committee of the church, C. W. Holmes, Jr., Rev, James Tufts, E. M. Walker, and the church officers. During the past year there have been received by letter six members, and three by profession. There have been ten members dropped from the roll, not having been heard from for a number of yeers; dismissed by letter to other churches, six members. At the close of last year there were 261 members on the roll. The close of this year showed a loss 14. The treasurer's report showed that during the past year they had been collected in the church $1826 01; in the Sunday school, $135 35; which has been distributed for benevolent causes.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Rev. Mr. Birch of New Haven in expected to preach at Ware Center next Sunday.

The Owls will hold their second annual concert and ball at the town hall February 9, with music by Brigham's Orchestra of Marlboro.

The church at Ware Center will have to look further for a pastor, as Rev. John L. Harris of Boston declines to accept the call given him.

The town hall will be occupied Wednesday evening, December 28, by John E. Ince in "Fun in a Boarding School," with what is said to be a good company.

James Mulhall, one of the railroad contractors who has resided here the past summer, has moved to New York. Himself and family had made many friends during their residence here.

The first through trains to Northampton on the Central road were run Monday. The first man to buy a ticket at Ware for Northampton was evidently so excited or interested in the new state of affairs that e left the train start without him, leaving him to wait for the next.

On Tuesday night the main pipe from the reservoir sprung a leak on Church street, near the Ware Steam Laundry. The water was shut off from the reservoir and police were posted to watch that there should be no damage by flooding. Wednesday morning the place was dug up and the leak stoped.

It is reported that a petition has been made to the officials for a station on the Central road at Gibbs's crossing. It is not a thickly settled locality, and hardly to be expected that a through line would make a stopping at such a place when Bondsville, that is quite a manufacturing place, is made a signal station for the majority of the trains.

Now that Bondsville is our near neighbor by way of the Central road, it may be interesting to know that our townsman, Daniel Sanford, drew the first stick of timber to build the first boarding house at that place, Mr. Sanford, in company with the late Ambrose Blair, having the contract to furnish the timber for the building erected there 42 years ago last June.

At a business meeting of Trinity Episcopal church Tuesday evening a committee was appointed to consider the matter of a new church, and see where a suitable site for such an edifice could be had. There is quite an amount of money already in the treasury for a building fund, and with the energy the society has already displayed, although few in numbers, no doubt a sufficient amount for a fine church will be forthcoming when they decide to build.

Dennis Town, "the hero of Post Hudson," visited us this week. He has been at work this past fall in New Braintree, Oakham and Barre, part of the time blasting rock on the Central Massachusetts R. R. He has alone drilled about nine hundred feet of holes—used about four kegs of powder and some dynamite, and nine hundred feet of fuse, and he is one who would never use more fuse than was needed—and still he lives. He will be fifty-six years old next June.

Anson Bassett did not rally from the paralytic shock which he received a week ago last Sunday, but died Thursday evening at the age of 80 years. He was born in the town of Hardwick, where he lived until 22 years ago, when he moved to the place where he died, having bought the farm from his brother. He has always lived a strictly upright, honorable life, and about two years ago, under the ministrations of Rev. F. S. Hatch, became a member of the East Congregational church. He left a wife, three sons and a daughter to mourn his loss.

It is understood that Rev. W. D. Brown of Gilbertville will read his resignation as pastor of the Congregational church next Sunday, after a successful pastorate there of 17 years, having been installed Dec. 6, 1870. He was married May 10, 1870, to Miss Mattie Page, who died Dec. 7, 1886, leaving three children. The church has largely increased in membership during Mr. Brown's ministration there, and an addition of a beautiful chapel has been made to the church and a fine parsonage built. Mr. Brown is expecting to spend the winter in Florida.

At the town meeting Thursday afternoon a committee of three, F. D. Gilmore, J. H. Storrs and P. J. Downey, were elected to appoint a commission of three who should make an appraisal of the Otis Company's taxable property in Ware, and report to the assessors. This step having been taken, the company will pay their taxes at once, and the town will be relieved from the necessity of borrowing money to pay the current expenses. It was voted to appropriate $400 now on hand and $500 additional for school expenses, also $500 for evening schools and $600 to be used by the road commissioners.

EX-SECRETARY MANNING is in so feeble a condition that his death is expected any day.

MAY the loving and tender spirit of the Savior, pervading the hearts of our readers, give them, one and all, truly "A Merry Christmas."

THE Prohibitory party will be the first to nominate presidential candidates next year, its national convention having been called to meet in Indianapolis, Ind., June 6.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER, the beloved poet, celebrated his 80th birthday quietly and pleasantly at his home in Danvers last Saturday, there being a constant stream of visitors, with gifts numerous and costly from his admirers in all parts of the country.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., had a startling experience with naphtha Wednesday afternoon. Leaks in a pipe line through which a large quantity of it was being pumped allowed it to escape in the adjoining sewers, resulting in a series of explosions, the burning of three mills and the loss of four lives at least, while some 20 persons were injured. Man-holes over the sewers were blown out over a large area, street paving torn up, and windows shattered in many buildings.

The Springfield Union is looking up in the world. Not finding a building high enough for its aspirations, it had a block extended heavenward, and now in its new, commodious and convenient quarters, with a new outfit from stem to stern, and a new Scott web perfecting press which will turn out 12,000 eight-page papers per hour, the Union is as happy as a boy with his first boots. It deserves its prosperity, too, for it is a model evening newspaper, growing better, like wine, with age, and we heartily congratulate Editor Shipley on these evidences of its increasing popularity.

LAST week's convention of Republican clubs in New York partially anticipated the work of the national convention of the party, in adopting a declaration of principles, making the tariff issue prominent, and taking the president sharply to task for his message. Every mention of and, though it was laughed at by many of the audience, yet it was badly out of place in a celebration of the stern virtues of the fathers.

The American Board issue still has some interest, and here is a little story about Newman Smythe's church in New Haven. The time for the annual contribution to the board came around and the pastor did not give the usual notice that it would be taken. So one of his parishioners went to him and insisted that the contribution should be taken and Smythe accordingly gave notice to that effect. When the Sunday came it was very stormy and the congregation was small. One of the members said to Mr. Smythe that it was a bad Sunday for a contribution and asked that it be put off until a better day. But Smythe said no; the announcement had been made and the contribution must be taken then. So it was taken and was small, of course. This week the board has heard from New Haven. The letter states that the contribution was small and so they had held the money until they could see more of the congregation privately and they now sent a sum slightly larger than last year. The contribution sent was $512, and it is about $75 more than they sent last year. Other instances of a similar nature have occurred. It will be noticed that the Board gets $25,000 by the will of the late David Whitcomb of Worcester.

Notwithstanding the apparent uselessness of it, I am told that there is still talk among the Republican senators against the reëlection of President Boardman of the state Senate on the ground that he is not in harmony with the rest of the party on the liquor question. There must be a caucus, according to recent precedents, and the Republicans must abide by the decision of that caucus. The Republicans have 25 members to the Democrats 15, and the former are supposed to elect their man without any assistance from the latter. If the party were determined to put up a man who sympathizes with the platform, of course it would not take Mr. Boardman.

The trial of Mrs. Robinson in Somerville for poisoning her son, and the standing of the jury eleven to one for acquittal, after they had stood seven to five for conviction, is a very queer case. A lawyer who has an intimate knowledge of the matter tells me that the verdict would probably not have been what it was had the jurymen not been in a hurry to get home,—and they were kept out for twenty-three hours. Furthermore, said he, there was probably not a man on the jury who did not believe her to be guilty of the murder of her own son, but the difficulty was in establishing the fact by the evidence. A gentleman who has followed the case regards the death of the son as the last in a series of murders by the woman and her accomplices for the sake of getting the insurance on the lives of the victims.

No more petitions to the Legislature are to be advertised this year, by order of the secretary of state, because there is not time for the three weeks' publication required by law.

The great jam of Christmas shoppers still continues, and there is no end to the crowds which throng our streets. In the toy stores the noise of rattles, horns and anything to make a racket upon is at times overwhelming.

Booth and Barrett are on their last week here, and they are playing the old tragedies nightly to crowded houses.

Electric street cars have made some trial trips which are quite satisfactory, and promise that the time will come when horses will be set aside altogether for this kind of service. LANDON.

The January number of The Eclectic, beginning a new volumne, has a fine steel engraving of the interior of the Coliseum at Rome. The number present to its readers a number of strong and readable articles. The leading paper, by Emilio Castelar, the great Spanish statesman, whose name is so widely identified with liberal movements, is on "The Papacy and Temporal Power," and discusses the question in a temperate but able manner. "The Story of Zebehr Pasha" is completed, and the succeeding paper, on "French Socialism," by M. Kaufmann, will be found to touch current problems in a very important degree. The well-known scientist, Alfred Russell Wallace, contributes a study of "Antiquity of Man in North America," and presents views of great interest. "On Some Differences between Colleges and Castles," is a pleasant essay. J. A. Farrer throws light on one of the great religions of the world, in the "Religion of Mithra, a study of Zowartranism." A writer in the Westminster Review gives us a brilliant and entertaining social study in "The French Women of the Century." H. G. Keene writes of Omar Khayyam, the great Persian poet and moralist, who has recently been made widely known to English readers. H. M. Hyndman, the Socialist, answers Mr. Mallock's recent articles in a short paper on "Wealth and Ability." "The Nerve Cure Rest," by James Muir Howie, ought to excite the interested reading of thousands of readers in this nervous and fretful age. There is a striking short story by J. H Shorthouse, "A Teacher of the Violin." The poetry of the number consists of several admirable new translations from Schiller, by Sir Theodore Martin. As this number begins a volume it offers a favorable time to begin subscriptions. Published by E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond street, New York. Terms, $5 per year; single numbers, 45 cents; trial subscriptions for three months $1. Eclectic and any $4 magazine, $8.

A NOVEL BUSINESS CALENDAR AND STAND.

A most novel, convenient and valuable business calendar for 1888 is the Columbia Bicycle Calendar and stand, just issued by the Pope Mfg Co., of Boston, Mass. In this calendar a new departure has been made, decidedly unique and different from any previous attempt in calendar construction The calendar proper is in the form of a pad, containing 366 leaves, one for each day in the year, to be torn off daily. The leaves are 5½ by 2¾ inches, and a portion of each leaf is left blank for memoranda, so arranged that the memoranda blank for any coming date can be turned to immediately at any time. The pad rests upon a portable stand, and when placed upon the desk or writing table the entire surface of the date leaf is brought directly, and left constantly, before the eye, furnishing date and memoranda, impossible to be overlooked. Upon each slip appear, as in the previous Columbia calendars, quotations pertaining to cycling from leading publications and prominent writers. The paragraphs are entirely new from previous years' calendars, and although there seems to be but little when read from day to day, altogether the items would make a medium-sized pamphlet, and, added to the collections of other years, a large volume—a collection of quotations which illustrates the popularity and universality of cycling the world over.

Pond's Extract, for Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Burns and all Inflammation. Its wonderful curative influence is long maintained. Genuine only in bottles with buff wrappers.

WHAT AM I TO DO?

The symptoms of Biliousness are unhapily too well known. They differ in different individuals to some extent. A bilious man is seldom a breakfast eater. To frequently, alas, he has an excellent appetite for liquids but none for solids of a morning. is tongue will hardly bear inspection at any time; if it is not white and furred, it is rough, at all events.

The digestive system is wholly out of order and Diarrhœa or Constipation may be a symptom or they may alternate. There are often Hemorrhoids or even loss of blood. There may be giddiness and often headache and acidity or flatulence and tenderness in the pit of the stomach. To correct all this if not effect a cure try Green's August Flower, t costs but a trifle and thousands attest its efficacy. 1

Scribner's Magazine.

Prospectus for 1888.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON will contribute regularly to each number during the year. In the first paper, entitled "A Chapter on Dreams," appearing in the January number, he relates incidentally, in connection with the general subject, some interesting facts concerning the origin of the now famous story, "Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS, by W. S. Chaplain, will be the first of an especially important and interesting series of papers on railways, their administrations and construction, including great engineering feats, famous tunnels and bridges, and, those branches of the subject which in this day engage the attention of the whole country.

DR. D. A. SARGENT'S papers on Physical Proportions and Physical training will be continued by several of increasing interest.

ILLUSTRATED ARTICLES of special interest will be those on the Campaign of Waterloo, by John C. Ropes; on "The Man-at-Arms," by E. H. Blashfield; two papers by Edward L. Wilson, illustrating results of recent Egyptian research; Prof. Shaler's articles on the Surface of the Earth will be continued.

ELECTRICITY in its various applications as a motive power, explosives, etc., will be the subject of another group of illustrated articles.

MENDELSSOHN'S LETTERS written to his friend, Moscheles, at a peculiarly interesting time in his career, will furnish the substance of several articles of great interest to musical readers.

THE FICTION will be strong, a serial novel, entitled "First Harvests," by Frederick J. Stimpson, will be begun in the January number, and early in the year novelettes by Henry James and H. C. Bunner. The short stories are of noticeable strength and freshness.

ILLUSTRATIONS. The magazine will show increased excellence in its illustrations. They will be more abundant and elaborate than ever. It is the intention of the publishers to present the best work of the leading artists, and to promote and foster the most skillful methods of wood engraving

SPECIAL NOTICE. To enable readers to possess the magazine from the first number (January, 1887,) the following inducements are offered: A year's subscription and the numbers for 1887 $4 50. A year's subscription and the numbers for 1887, bound in two volumes, cloth, gilt top.

Littell's Living Age.

In 1888 the Living Age enters upon its forty-fifth year, having met with constant commendation and success.

A Weekly Magazine, it gives fifty-two numbers of sixty-four pages each, or more than

THREE AND A QUARTER THOUSAND

double-column octavo pages of reading matter yearly. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its great amount of matter, with freshness, owing to its weekly issue, and with a completeness nowhere else attempted

The best essays, reviews, criticisms, serial and short stories, sketches of travel and discovery, poetry, scientific, biographical, historical and political information, from the entire body of Foreign Literature, from the pens of the

FOREMOST LIVING WRITERS.

The ablest and most cultivated intellects in every department of literature, science, politics and art, find expression in the periodical literature of Europe, and especially of Great Britain.

The Living Age, forming four large volumes a year, furnishes, from the great and generally inaccessible mass of this literature, the only compilation that, while within the reach of all, is satisfactory in the completeness with which it embraces whatever is of immediate interest, or of solid, permanent value.

It is therefore indispensable to every one who wishes to keep pace with the events of intellectual progress of the time, or to cultivate in himself or his family general intelligence and literary tastes.

OPINIONS.

"We have thought that it was impossible to improve upon this grand publication, yet it does seem to grow better each year. We regard it as the most marvelous publication of the time."—Christian at Work, New York.

"By reading it one can keep abreast of the current thought upon all literary and public matters."—New York Observer.

"Such a publication exhausts our superlatives. There is nothing noteworthy in science, art, literature, biography, philosophy, or religion, that cannot be found in it. It contains nearly all the good literature of the time."—The Churchman, New York.

"Fiction, biography, science, criticisms, history, poetry, art, and, in the broader sense, politics, enter into its scope, and are represented in its pages. Nearly the whole world of authors and writers appear in it in their best moods. The readers miss very little that is important in the periodical domain."—Boston Journal

"It is edited with great skill and care, and its weekly appearance gives it certain advantages over its monthly rivals."—Albany Argus.

"It may be truly and cordially said that it never offers a dry or valueless page."—N. Y. Tribune.

"At its publication price it is the cheapest reading one can procure."—Boston Globe.

"It furnishes a complete compilation of an indispensable literature."—Chicago Evening Journal.

"It enables its readers to keep fully abreast of the best thought and literature of civilization."—Christian Advocate, Pittsburg.

"It is absolutely without a rival."—Montreal Gazette.

Facts You Can Bet On.

That the oldest and largest tobacco factory in the world is in Jersey City, N. J.

That this factory makes the popular and world-famed Climax Plug, the acknowledged standard for first-class chewing tobacco.

That this factory was established as long ago as 1760.

The last year (1886) it made and sold the enormous quantity of 27,982,280 pounds, or fourteen thousand tons of tobacco.

That this was more than one-seventh of all the tobacco made in the United States, notwithstanding that there were 966 factories at work.

That in the last 21 years this factory has helped support the United States Government to the extent of over forty four million seven hundred thousand dollars ($44,700,000) paid into the U. S. Treasury in Internal Revenue taxes.

That the pay-roll of this factory is about $1,000,000 per year, or $20,000 per week.

That this factory employs about 5300 operatives.

That this factory makes such a wonderfully good chew in Climax Plug that many other factories have tried to imitate it in vain, and in despair now try to attract custom by offering larger pieces of inferior goods for the same price.

That this factory nevertheless continues to increase it business every year.

That this factory belongs to and is operated by Yours, very truly,

Nirvana.

I am
A clam;
Come learn of me
Unclouded peace and calm content,
Serene, supreme tranquility
Where thoughtless dreams and dreamless thoughts are blent;
When the salt tide is rising to the flood,
In billows blue my placid pulp I lave:
And when it ebbs I slumber in the mud,
Content alike with ooze or crystal wave.
I do not shudder when in chowders stewed,
Nor when the Coney Islander engulfs me raw;
When in the church soup's dreary solitude
Alone I wander, do I shudder? Naw!
If jarring tempests beat upon my bed,
Or summer peace there be,
I do not care; as I have said,
All's one to me;
A clam
I am.

What did she do that for?

I dont't know. May be she gave him a letter and he forgot to mail it.—Omaha World.

When a man comes home late at night, after working hard all the evening at the office on the books, it is mean for his wife to require him to say: "Say, should such a shapely sash shabby stitches show?" before she will unbolt the front door.—Journal of Education.

Little Nellie, aged three—Papa, why don't mamma tum to breffast?

Papa—Why, my dear, didn't you know the doctor brought you a new baby brother?

Little Nellie—Well, why don't it tum to breffast?

Papa—Why, it hasn't any teeth to eat with yet.

Little Nellie, after deliberating a while—Well, papa, I wish you would tell the doctor to take it back and finish it.—Boston Globe

It was raining hard, and he stood under the shelter of a Jefferson avenue awning and watched until the right sort of a man came along. Then he stepped out and said:

"Ah! I was laying for you, old fellow! That umbrella was stolen from me three months ago."

"Chestnuts!" was the prompt reply.

"Don't you believe me?"

"Hush! I just got it five minutes ago by playing the same game. Tackle the next man!"—Detroit Free Press.

'That boy of yours' Mr. Jones, takes after you,' said a guest at Jones' dinner table.

'He is just like his mother,' replied Jones.

'I can't see it that way, Mr. Jones. The boy certainly takes after you.'

'That's what I said. He takes after me, and so does his mother. She took after me with the poker yesterday evening, because I told her she wasn't as fresh looking as the hired girl. She will take after me again as soon as you are gone. We are a taking family, we are.'—Arcola Record.

The Only Remedy for

Contagious Blood Poison.

Mr. D. B. Adams of Union, South Carolina, writes: "I was afflicted with a terrible case of blood poison for about thirteen months. I was treated by the best physicians, and used various remedies, but received no substantial relief. I finally tried the Swift Specific, and about four bottles cured me sound and well."

Col. R. H. Kieser, editor and proprietor of the Opelika, Ala., Times, under date of August 3, 1887, writes: "When a young man, through indiscretion, I contracted a terrible disease which has stuck to me for years. Some five or six years since I was troubled with pains, so as to make it difficult for me to walk. Having advertised the S. S. S. in my paper for several years, I concluded I would try it to see if there was any efficacy in the medicine. I commenced using it according to directions and used half a dozen bottles. I was once at a way station, and getting left, I walked the seven miles and have never felt any return of the old malady. After experiencing the good effects I must say I am satisfied with the result. I am sixty-eight years of age and I feel now like a young man and can go to the case when necessary and set up from six to eight thousand ems without any inconvenience. I send you this without solicitation."

Mr. F. Woehl, 211 North Avenue, Chicago, under date of June 12, 1887, writes: "I deem it my duty to thank you for the cure I received from your excellent medicine. I contracted a very severe case of blood poisoning about two years ago. Hearing of your medicine I went to a drug store, the proprietor of which persuaded me to buy a preparation of his own, which he said was a sure cure. I used six bottles of his stuff and grew worse all the time. At last I got disgusted and despaired of a cure. I met a friend who told me that your medicine cured him. I went to the same druggist and demanded your medicine. He reluctantly sold me twelve bottles, and I am now perfectly cured. I write this for the benefit of sufferers, to prevent their being deceived by false representations. I thank you again for the benefit derived from your medicine."

Dr. J. N. Cheney, a prominent physician, residing in Ellaville, Schley county, Georgia, in a letter recounting the infallible success he has in curing contagious blood poisoning cases in his extensive practice, writes: "Those who know the almost inevitable, permanently dangerous effects of mercury will welcome your discovery of S. S. S. as a boon to humanity. The medical profession, is coming slowly, and in some cases secretly, to the use of S. S. S. in cases of blood disorder. Of course a medicine that cures poisoning in its worst form must purify the blood of ever disorder."

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer as demonstrations of the unequalled excellency of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free.

PIANOS. Mason & Hamlin's Piano Stringer was introduced by them in 1882, and has been pronounced by experts the "greatest improvement in pianos in half a century. A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant. Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

The Old Wife.

By the bed the old man, waiting, sat in vigil sad and tender,
Where his aged wife lay dying; and the twilight shadows brown
Slowly from the wall and window chased the sunset's splendor
Going down.

"Is it night?" she whispered, waking (for her spirit seemed to hover Lost between the next world's sunrise and the bedtime cares of this).
And the old man, weak and tearful, trembling as he bent above her,
Answered "Yes."

"Are the children in?" she asked him. Could he tell her? All the treasures
Of their household lay in silence many years beneath the snow;
But her heart was with them, living back among her toils and pleasures
Long ago.

And again she called at dew-fall, in the sweet old summer wheather,
"Where is little Charley, father? Frank and Robert, have they come?"
"They are safe," the old man faltered—"all the children are together, Safe at home."

Then he murmured gentle soothings, but his grief grew stronger and stronger,
Till it choked and stilled him as he held and kissed her wrinkled hand,
For her soul, far out of hearing, could his fondest words no longer Understand.

Still the pale lips stammered questions, lullabies and broken verses,
Nursery prattle—all the language of a mother's loving heart,
While the midnight round the mourner, left to sorrow's bitter mercies,
Wrapped in weeds.

There was stillness on the pillow—and the old man listened lonely—
Till they led him from the chamber, with the burden on his breast,
For the wife of seventy years, his manhood's early love and only,
Lay at rest.

"Fare-you-well," he sobbed, "my Sarah;—you will meet the babes before me;
'Tis a little while, for neither can the parting long abide,
And you'll come and call me soon, I know—and Heaven will restore me
To your side.

It was even so. The spring-time in the steps of winter treading,
Scarcely shed its orchard blossoms ere the old man closed his eyes,
And they buried him by Sarah—and they had their "diamond wedding"
In the skies.

NORAH'S NEW YEAR.

It was New Year's Eve. The streets were thronged with pedestrians, the jingle of sleigh bells was ever and anon heard, and all the world seemed to have forgotten care and taken a holiday. But not so. There were sad faces amid the merry ones; the poor and the wretched jostled against the gay and happy; and this life picture like all others had its dark background.

Looking in at the brightly lighted window of a confectioner's stood a little girl, her face blue with cold and hunger, her eyes wistful and pathetic. She had on a light calico dress, shoes that were too large for her, and a strange kind of garment—half shawl, half cloak—so worn and patched that one could not tell its original shape or color. Her age was not over nine or ten, yet she seemed more like a little old woman than a child. There was an air of wisdom in the way she turned her head and wrinkled up her forehead and pressed lips together, as she gazed at the confectioner's candies and cakes, as if she thought them all very pretty, but at the same time rather unsubstantial. Once or twice the child nature showed itself in her eyes, but it was quickly followed by an expression of gravity and sorrow touching in one so young.

Finally she turned away with a sigh, and at that instant the confectioner's door opened, and a lady, richly dressed, came out. Something in the child's face or look attracted her attention. She stopped, drew the shivering little figure toward the light, and scanned it curiously.

"What is your name, dear?" she asked kindly.

"Norah," was the answer, given in a low voice, and with a look of wonder at the questioner.

"Norah!" echoed the lady, "Norah what?"

"Norah Brady, ma'am."

"Oh!" and an expression, partly of relief, partly of disappointment, swept over the listener's face. Then she slipped some money into the child's hand, and whispered, "Spend it as you please, dear. It is a New Year's gift."

Norah's cheeks flushed, and she drew back a little proudly.

"I cannot take it, ma'am," she answered, in even, steady tones. "Papa would be angry if I did."

"Angry that you accept a gift? Why so?"

"Because we're poor, and when people give us things he says it's out of charity."

"But is that any reason for refusing them?"

"Yes, for papa and I are independent, and had rather earn our own money." The little figure straightened itself with an air of dignity almost womanly.

"You are a strange child," was the reply, and the lady looked interested and amused. "Tell me where you live?"

The street and number were named, and then Norah raised her honest blue eyes and said softly, "Please don't think me ungrateful, ma'am. You are very kind indeed. Only that papa has seen better days, and that it hurts him so now to be poor, I might perhaps keep it." And she handed back the money with a wistful glance that spoke volumes.

"Have you a mother, dear?" questioned the other.

The blue eyes filled with tears. "No, ma'am," she answered, in a quivering voice. "Mamma died three years ago."

Why was it that a throb of pain stirred the listener's heart at these words? What was Norah's mother to her? She felt drawn toward the child, she hardly knew why; drawn, too, toward the dead mother and the strange, proud father. Norah's eyes, Norah's name, were like those of a little sister she had loved and lost—not by death but by a separation. She had never forgotten it, and to-night the memory of that olden time softened her heart and made her pitiful toward the grief of others. But all this while her carriage stood waiting, with a white-haired old gentleman inside, and the coachman impatiently stamping his feet.

"I must leave you," she whispered to Norah at last, longing to clasp the little figure to her breast. "I shall come and see you soon, may I not?" Then seeing that the child hesitated to reply, she added, "Are you afraid your papa will object? Tell him charity has nothing to do with it, but that it is for my own sake, and because you remind me of some one I loved years ago, that I wish to come."

Norah was a hospitable little soul, and the beautiful lady had completely won her heart. "Papa will be glad to see you," she said simply, "and I too."

"Thank you, dear." Then moved by a sudden impulse the lady stooped down and kissed her. The coachman looked on, rubbed his eyes, and thought that perhaps Norah was some little princess in disguise. So she was, and by a right more royal than that of blood or money.

"What child was that?" questioned the white-haired old gentleman, as the lady took her seat in the carriage and told the coachman to drive on. "Some beggar whose tale of distress touched your sympathy?" He looked at her fondly and in a manner that showed that she was the "one woman of the world" to him.

"Not a beggar," and the lady smiled and told how Norah had refused the money.

"But the child interested me strangely. She had eyes like those of the little Norah I left in Ireland, and for a minute I had a faint hope that my search was at last ended. But she said her name was Brady."

"And yours was O'Connell," said the gentleman. "And it was not here, but to France that he migrated."

"I know," and a touch of impatience came into her voice. "It was but for a minute, as I said. Afterwards I understood how impossible it was." She sighed bitterly and went on: "I wonder if this is to be the punishment for my folly—that I am never to know the fate of those I deserted?"

"That girlish folly, as you call it, dear wife, has been expiated long since," was the answer. Let the dead past bury its dead. Do not make yourself miserable by raking up its ashes."

"I am not unhappy," she said, softly, "Why should I be? Every wish is gratified save one—that of a reconciliation with my parents, and perhaps it is right this should be denied me."

"Has it never occurred to you that they may be dead?" asked the gentleman, looking at her compassionately.

"Many times," she answered. "But I cannot believe it. Something seems to tell me that they are living and in want."

"Oh, that is because the agent we sent over to Ireland told that your father had lost his property. You would naturally think of him as poor after that."

"Yes, and when pride is joined to poverty the struggle is the harder. Father was a strange man; stern and haughty, and obstinate; but under a harsh exterior was hid one of the warmest hearts that ever beat. I cannot understand why he left Ireland so suddenly, and covered up all traces of his flight, lest those who had known him in his prosperity should witness his humiliation. He could not have borne that; it would have been the added drop of bitterness that would have choked him. But mother was different; so meek and gentle, and was the only person living who knew how to manage him. Every one else was sure to see the worst side of his nature."

"Ah, yes! You have told me of her before. But I cannot understand, Kate, why she never answered you letters. You were but 17 when you eloped; a mere child, and she might have given you some words of hope and comfort when your heart was breaking from his baseness. True, he was your wedded husband, and held you by a bond stronger than that of parents; but their silence was cruel, and I cannot forgive them for it."

"You do not know how I tried their love. My father warned me against the man, my mother told me of his falsehoods and wickedness, and I deceived them both. Oh! I was guilty of such subterfuges, it seemed as if a demon had entered into me, and I was no longer my old self! Whatever they said only increased my obstinacy, and made me more infatuated with the object of their censure. Besides, you must remember that my father had reason to think I robbed him the night of my departure, though the theft was committed without my knowledge, and by the wretch into whose hands I had trusted my honor and happiness. That I could have been so blinded to his real character seems impossible now; but he had a winning, plausible manner, and I was vain and foolish, fond of flattery and admiration."

"You fled to America at once did you not, and wrote from there?"

"Yes. My husband's villainy was first revealed to me on board of the ship which took us over. I accidentally came across the money he had stolen from father, and I recognized the purse that held it as one I had knitted myself. I asked him for an explanation, and he gave it boldly. It was then I found out that there had been a feud of long standing between him and my father, and that it was for this he had married me, and thus struck his enemy to the heart."

"Though the villain is dead it makes my blood boil to think of him, Kate. But did you not mention all this in your letters—the plot, the stolen money?"

"Yes, and more too. I told of my desolate condition in New York, alone and friendless, for as soon as I landed I fled from the wretch whom the law had made my husband. He followed me, persecuted me; and oh! the terrible life that I led those two years that he lived. It is dreadful to say it, but his death was actually a relief."

"And they never answered your letters!" said her husband indignantly. "I cannot understand such vindictiveness."

"The first one was returned unopened," she answered; "of the others I never had any tidings. But I am sure they would have forgiven me had they known all. It may be that the letters were intercepted. The suspicion has occurred to me lately that they fell into my husband's hands, and that he remailed and stamped the first one to deceive me and prevent my writing others."

"Don't call that man your husband, Kate. It makes me shiver. He was capable of anything, and I have no doubt your suspicions are correct. But surely you wrote after his death?"

"I did not," she replied. "I was so utterly heart broken by all that had occurred as to believe myself an outcast from love and kindness forever more. You know what I suffered, and how I went from place to place. Ah! can I ever forget from what a life you rescued me?"

"But remember, you said it was for love, not gratitude you became my wife. For I am old enough to be your father, Kate, and had you refused me, I would have adopted you as my daughter."

"Old in years but young in heart," she answered. If my first marriage was a wretched mistake, my second was indeed blest, and crowned with such happiness as I never hoped to enjoy."

The carriage had reached the suburbs of the city by this time, and now stopped in front of a large, old-fashioned house of hospitable aspect, very inviting.

"Home at last!" said the gentleman, jumping out as nimbly as if he had been younger. "Come Kate."

She followed, and leaning on his arm went up the steps and into the house. No further allusion was made by either to the subject of their converstion during the drive. But the thoughts of one kept continually recurring to the child she had seen in front of the confectioner's, and when Kate Hilliard closed her eyes to sleep that night it was with the firm resolve to see Norah's father early the next day, and find out who he was and whence he came. For Norah's words, Norah's looks, seemed like an echo from the past, and had in them something of the spirit she remembered.

Norah's thoughts were as full of her as hers of Norah. "Such a lovely lady," mused the child, as she hurried home. "I don't think papa would have minded my taking the money, if he had heard all she said, and seen exactly how she looked. It is New Year's Eve, and what if she was not a real lady at all, but just some fairy going round doing good! I saw a nice old gentleman in her carriage, though, and a live coachman on top. I guess she's flesh and blood like the rest, only kinder and more thoughtful."

It was toward a wretched quarter of the city that Norah bent her steps, and the tenement where she stopped was old and dilapidated, and crowded with human beings. She ascended the stair and found her way to a room dimly lighted by a tallow candle. The door stood open, and she entered softly. Then shading her eyes with her hand, she looked around. There was a bed in one corner, and upon that a man lay asleep.

"Poor papa," she thought, "he is tired out. The doctor says he ought not to work, but he will, and I can't help it. I almost wish I'd taken the money. I would have bought a chicken, and I could have made him some broth to-morrow. But he wouldn't have eaten it if he had known how I got it. Oh, dear! Oh, dear! It is so hard to be poor and have a sick father."

She bustled about a little, setting the room to rights, and tried to look cheerful, though she felt down hearted. But the tears came in spite of her when she went to the cupboard and looked in to see what there was for breakfast. Only a few dry crusts and a small piece of bacon. If it had not been for New Year's Eve, their poverty would not have seemed so bitter. She had gone hungry before, and never complained, but now, looking at her pale, worn father, and remembering the sad Christmas they had spent, her heart rebelled. Then her mother's sweet face rose up before her as if in reproach, and she folded her hands together and breathed a prayer for health and comfort. Poor Norah! a child in years, but weighed down with a woman's cares, old in trouble and the wisdom born of it, it was well that she early learned where to look for guidance when sore and distressed and buffeted by the world.

Her father did not awake, and she finally took up the bit of candle and retired to an inner room, hardly larger than a closet. Its only furniture was a little cot-bed. Into that she crept, and soon fell asleep. She dreamed of an angel with the face of her dead mother, and of the beautiful lady who in some magical way had been changed into a fairy, all gold spangles and lace.

The sun was nearly an hour high when she awoke the next morning, though her room was still dark, for it had but one little window high up, that opened on a brick wall. But she rubbed her eyes and looked around as if bewildered, for surely some one bent over her and whispered softly, "Little sister! Little sister!" She sat up in bed, and then felt two arms clasp her close, and warm kisses rain down on brow and lips and cheeks. She was not afraid, only wondered what it all meant, and whether she was really in her own room, or in fairyland, or in heaven.

"Dress quickly, dear," said the voice she had heard first. "There is a gentleman waiting to see you."

The voice was that of the beautiful lady, and so was the form she recognized by the dim light. Half believing it a dream still, Norah slipped on her clothes, and with her hand clasped in that of her companion, opened the door of the other room. There sat her father and the white-haired old gentleman she remembered so well, talking cosily together; and if she had been puzzled and bewildered before, she was even more so now.

"Come here, daughter," said Mr. Brady, or O'Connell, as he was called thereafter.

"The New Year has brought you a sister."

"What do you mean, papa?" Norah stammered.

Tell her Kate," whispered the white-haired old gentleman.

Mr. O'Connell had heard the story before, but he listened again as the sweet voice trembled in its narration, and once wiped a tear furtively from his eye.

"My sister! my own sister!" cried Norah, joyfully clasping Kate close. Then in a low voice she added, "The last word mamma spoke was your name."

"At this, tears came into the eyes of both, and Mr. Hillard seeing them, rose hastily and said, "Come, come, Kate, it is time we were going. Your father is ready, and so is Norah. You can talk all you want to afterward."

Mr. O'Connell's reluctance to accept his daughter's hospitality was finally overcome, and he consented that Norah and himself should make part of her household. His pride was great, and he had assumed a false name, and almost make a martyr of Norah, but he began to have a faint perception that a great deal of error and selfishness were mixed with it, and was ready to make amends.

He soon afterward recovered his health, and through Mr. Hillard's instrumentality obtained employment, at once lucrative and honorable, so that he was enabled to support himself and Norah independently.

Norah grew more like a child, and less like a woman, under the new influences by which she was surrounded. But she was none the less true and honest, and her sister rejoiced to see the signs of care fade out of the young face that had once been of so sad a nature.

But neither Norah, nor Kate, nor Mr. O'Connell ever forgot the day that ushered in their new-found happiness, and to them the New Year brings greater joy than any other holiday.

MADE OF SHEET STEEL.

"Very handsome, is it not?"

A dealer in laces was exhibiting to an inquisitive reporter a remarkably tasteful specimen of an extremely delicate pattern, and so light that it could almost be blown away by a breath of air. Had it been woven of spider webs it could not have been much lighter.

"Very handsome, indeed. What is it made of?"

"What do you suppose?"

"Silk, probably; but how was it made so light?"

"Because it is not made of silk."

"What then?"

"Steel."

"Steel!"

"Yes, made of steel rolled as fine as the point of a cambric needle."

"How was it woven?"

"It wasn't woven. It was stamped out of a piece of low-grade steel, so that it would not be too brittle."

"What can it be used for?"

"This is only on experiment. It was turned out of a small Pittsburg mill and sent to me to show what can be done in that line. In the course of time other patterns will be made, heavier, perhaps, but certainly more tenacious than this piece. They can be used for children's underwear and hats very nicely. There is no question as to its durability, and its cheapness makes it the most saleable of all laces in the market. I am looking for its perfection with great interest. It will create a small revolution in the market."

STRANGE.

A lawyer named Strange lay dying upon his bed. He had been a man of good parts and enjoyed the esteem of all who knew him. The end was fast approaching when the pallid lawyer rolled upon his side and called to his most estimable wife.

"What is it, dear?" the good woman asked, as she placed her cold, outstretched hand in his own.

"When I shall have been buried," the lawyer murmured, his pale, blue eyes filling with tears; "when I shall have been buried, Mollie, rear no monument above my grave. Let my tombstone be small and of pure marble. Upon this simple slab let not my name appear. Let the stone bear this simple inscription, 'Here lies an honest lawyer.' The inscription I have given you will tell all. Persons who pass by my grave will see the simple stone and read the inscription, 'Here lies an honest lawyer.' If you happen to be in the neighborhood, Mollie, you will hear each exclaim, as he turns to go away, 'Well, that's Strange'!"

HE WAS SILENCED.—The following conversation, heard by a reporter on the street last night, is suggestive:

"Are you still tugging away at those gloves of yours?"

"Yes, dear."

"You know it disgusts me to see you walking through the streets making your toilet."

Does it, dear?"

"Why, do you know that I had just as soon see you pulling on your—stockings in the streets as your gloves?"

"Most men would," was all she said, and he had nothing else to say.—St. Joseph News.

"Do you know, mamma, I don't believe Solomon was so rich after all?" observed a sharp boy to his mother, who prided herself on her orthodoxy.

"My child!" she exclaimed in pious horror. "What does the Bible say?"

"That's just it," he answered. "It says that 'Solomon slept with his fathers.' Now, surely, if he had been rich he'd have had a bed to himself."—Chamber's Journal.

An enjoyable entertainment was held at the residence of S. H. Hellyar on Thorndike street Monday evening, in recognition of Christmas. A large number of invited guests were present.

The Patterson Club met at the residence of Dr. W. H. Stowe Wednesday evening, instead of Tuesday, as was previously proposed. A good entertainment was given by the young people.

At St. Thomas' Catholic church next Sunday the feast of the circumcision of our Lord will be celebrated, and the choir will render the same mass as last Sunday, with orchestral accompaniment.

A horse belonging to a Thorndike man became frightened and ran on West Main street Monday afternoon, smashing the cutter and throwing out the two men who were in it, who escaped without further injury.

Charles Bogue, telegraph operator at the union passenger station for the New London Northern road, was quite badly bitten upon the hand by a dog Wednesday afternoon. The animal belonged to Horace Moulton of Monson.

The officers of Quaboag Council, Royal Arcanum, will be publicly installed next Tuesday evening by District Deputy Grand Master Durgin of Springfield. A collation will be served, after which there will be speech-making.

Mrs. H. H. Sanders had a narrow escape from a serious accident last Saturday evening, falling nearly the whole length of the stairs from the public library to the street, but fortunately escaping with no more serious injury than a thorough shaking up.

Locomotive "Brattleboro," drawing freight train No. 32 on the New London Northern railroad, was derailed near Belchertown Wednesday afternoon, causing a three-hour blockade of all trains on the line. No serous damage was done and no one injured.

H. G. Loomis sold 49 sleds Christmas week, which shows that the boys and girls of this village are prepared for coasting. Other merchants report having disposed of quantities of ice-skates, which indicates also that the old-time sport is again becoming popular.

Deputy Sheriff Northrop arrested Albert Dean last Friday, who was wanted for breaking and entering the house of John D. Anthony at Monson a short time ago. He had a hearing before the district court Saturday, and was bound over to await the decision of the grand jury.

A horse belonging to A. T. Wing overturned a sleigh near the Point of Rocks Sunday morning and ran at a rapid rate through Main street, not being stopped until it reached Monson. The occupants of the sleigh were fortunately not injured, although a shaft was broken on the cutter.

The first entertainment in the high school lecture course was attended by a good sized audience at the Congregational church Tuesday evening, when Geo. Parsons Gilman, in his talk on "The Land of the Nile," interested his audience for an hour and a half with views and a description of that country.

"Fun in a Boarding-school" was presented at the Park street rink last evening by John E. Ince and company to a small audience, on account of the extreme cold weather. The piece is an absurd combination, but the actors were all good, and the comical situations, jokes and performances of the company kept the audience in a roar the most of the time.

Among the number who spent Christmas in town were Milton S. Holdsworth of Turner's Falls; Everett Carpenter of New York City; Fred G. Leach of Springfield and Fred Winter and Fred Leland of Boston; S. S. Parks, Chicago; Walter Chilson, Lawrence; A. D. Northrop, Boston; C. J. Tuthill, Boston; Fred Tuthill, Springfield; Mrs. C. E. Hellyar, Warren; H. A. Clark, Springfield; Fred Gamwell, Worcester.

Scribner's Magazine is now on file at the reading room. The reading public constantly demand that more daily papers should be on file there, and the ones that are needed the most are the New York World, New York Tribune, Worcester Spy, Hartford Courant, Boston Daily Advertiser and Boston Herald. Here is a chance for some large-hearted citizen to present the room one of the above papers for a year.

The first of the farmers' institutes of the season will be held at the Weeks House hall Jan. 10th, at 10 o'clock a. m. The subject for discussion in the afternoon will be "The Business side of Farming; the advantages of Organization and the benefits of the Grange." The principal afternoon speaker will be either Arthur Brigham of Marlboro or Henry A. Barton, Jr., of Dalton. The ladies are invited to attend the afternoon session.

The Second Baptist church, at its annual meeting Monday evening, made choice of the following officers: Clerk, C. B. Fisk; deacons, L. Dimock, C. B. Fisk; treasurer, F. L. Brooks; collector, C. E. Fuller; executive committee, Rev. A. W. Weeks, S. Edgerton, P. M. Shearer, W. Rhodes, C. B. Fisk; prudential committee, the pastor, deacons, E. G. Buss, F. L. Brooks, Mrs. C. B. Fisk, Mrs. A. W. Weeks; auditing committee, C. B. Fisk, G. H. Justin.

Lyman Dimock, an aged and well-known citizen, was thrown from a sleigh last Saturday against the house of George Robinson on Pleasant street, sustaining some injuries about the head and face, and also rupturing an artery. He was taken to his home on Central street and attended by Dr. G. H. Wilkins, who reports that he is recovering. The accident was due to the horse taking fright and colliding with the trees on the corner of School and Pleasant streets.

Quite a large party went to Springfield Monday evening on the 6.09 train to witness the oratorio of "The Messiah." J. W. Weeks drove in with a large sleigh drawn by four horses, and conveyed the following party home, reaching Palmer Tuesday morning: James B. Shaw and wife, C. A. Brown and wife, F. C. Hatch and wife, George W. Ely, C. M. Abbe, C. C. Abbe, Mrs. F. L. Wallace, Miss Addie Rogers, Miss Ida Smith, Miss Effie Smith, Miss Helen Cobb and Miss Anna Fisherdick.

That old but ever welcome drama, "Comrades," will be presented at the Park street rink next Friday evening, under the auspices of the Grand Army post, with tableaux under the direction of the Woman's Relief Corps. The Palmer Orchestra will furnish music, and the following names in the cast will be sufficient to draw a full house:

Roy Manning,	W. F. Shaw
Marcus Graves,	F. R. Sistare
Matt Wilson,	B. M. Griswold
Simon Stone,	H. E. Griswold
May Manning,	Miss Nettie Coleman
Bessie Bradley,	Miss Della Holbrook
Nancy Nipper,	Mrs. Flora Hitchcock

There will be another match game of polo at Park street rink to-morrow evening between the Gilbertvilles, the champion polo team of Western Massachusetts, and the Palmers. The game will be played under the New England rules, the actual playing time being 40 minutes. The Palmers will appear in new uniforms on that occasion. After the game, which is to be called at 9 o'clock, there will be a two-mile race between Daniel Finnerty of Palmer and William Smith of Springfield, for the championship of Hampden county. Music will be furnisned by the new rink band.

Aaron B. Dimmock, brother of Lyman Dimock of this place, died at his home in Norwich village, Huntington, on the 15th inst. at the age of 84. He had been in feeble health for a short time, and at last his stomach became paralyzed, rejecting all food, and he literally starved to death, being unable to take a particle of nourishment for forty days preceeding his death. Mr. Dimock was for many years a leading man in the town, filling various offices, and representing the town in the Legislature in 1834 and 1840. He had been a member of the First Congregational church for 50 years. He leaves a widow, two brothers and a sister.

C. N. Stimpson & Co. of Springfield are to continue the series of concerts begun with Theodore Thomas, and are trying to put that enterprise on a permanent and paying basis. The next concert will be February 6, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra of 75 pieces, with piano and vocal soloists, will appear. Special trains will be run as heretofore, and every facility offered people in this vicinity to get as good as they could in Boston or New York. It is left with the public to make the undertaking financially successful, and therefore permanent—continued each season. A subscription list will probably be opened in all outside towns, to enable the management to learn how many to prepare for.

At the annual meeting of the Second Congregational church, held last evening, these officers were elected: Clerk, O. P. Allen; treasurer, J. H. Tuthill; treasurer of benevolencies, O. P. Allen; auditor, J. B. Shaw; superintendent of the Sunday-school, J. B. Shaw; 1st assistant, Dr. C. W. Cross; 2d assistant, Mrs. J. B. Shaw; secretary and treasurer, C. M. Abbe; librarian, J. H. Gamwell; organists, Misses Lena Brown and Carrie Tuthill; standing committee of the church, the pastor, deacons, J. B. Shaw, J. H. Tuthill, O. P. Allen, Mrs. J. S. Holden, Mrs. H. Lawrence, Mrs. C. N. Brainard; committee on visiting sick and strangers; Mrs. John Breckenridge, George Fisherdick, Mrs. Laura Child, Mrs. L. M. Burleigh, Mrs. W. H. Hitchcock, Mrs. C. L. Gardner, Mrs. J. B. Shaw, Mrs. J. Kenerson, Hubbard Lawrence, J. W. Shanks; committee on poor, Dr. W. Holbrook, S. W. Lawrence. Mrs. C. N. Brainard; committee on welcoming strangers in church, L. E. Moore. C. W. Bennett, J. B. Shaw, Mrs. George Fisherdick, Mrs. A. E. Park; ushers, William Higgins, Harry Taft, B. P. Morse. Quite a number will unite with the church next Sunday.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR to all, and many pleasant returns.

NOW is the time for brushing up old resolutions to shine as new for a short time, before laying them carefully away again for another year.

THE interstate commerce commission has decided to submit to Congress the question whether express companies are subject to the provisions of the interstate law.

HAVING reëlected its Democratic city government, the citizens of Boston have now organized a citizens' association to watch it and see that it behaves itself.

SECRETARY FAIRCHILD has carried dismay to many hearts by ordering a reduction of employes and pay, and an increase of hours in the New England custom houses.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has presented the pope with a handsomely bound copy of the constitution of the United States, possibly as a gentle reminder that his holiness ought to read up on that subject.

FRANK C. MCNEELY, the young Saco, Me., bank defaulter, has turned up in Halifax, N. S., where he was arrested last Friday, though his release soon followed, as he could not be held. He has traveled extensively in Europe since his defalcation, and the bonds stolen from the bank are thought to be still concealed somewhere in Egypt.

DANIEL MANNING, President Cleveland's trusted friend and first secretary of the treasury, died at Albany last Saturday. When Mr. Manning took the treasury portfolio he was known only as an expert political manager, and his appointment was regarded as a serious mistake, but he administered the business of his department with rare skill and wisdom, devoting himself so thoroughly to his work that his system gave way, and he retired a broken-down man, but esteemed and honored by all.

"THERE is no new thing under the sun," said the Preacher, and evidences are multiplying that the New World is far from being as new as has been supposed, but instead is really very old. Certain it is that there is no necessity for Americans to go to far distant countries in search of antiquities, for treasures of history, rare and striking in interest and value, are to be found in our own country. For some months the Hemenway expedition has been at work in Arizona, under the direction of Frank Cushing, whose interesting record of life among the Zuni Indians a few years ago will be well remembered, and in the Salt River valley traces of Toltec civilization of extraordinary interest have been unearthed. There are nineteen buried cities in the valley, and Mr. Cushing is of the apparently well-grounded opinion that the people who dwelt in them antedated the Aztecs, "and had upon this continent a civilization older than the pyramids." The entire valley was once a system of cities, with ajacent farms, and up in the mountains are sacrificial caves and pueblos of stone, many of which have never been explored, and are entirely unknown to the wandering tourist and sight-seer. The people probably were of Asiatic blood. They were an agricultural people and understood the art and science of irrigation far better than the farmers of the present day. They cut canals through solid rock, one of these being certainly more than three hundred miles long, and not to be duplicated to-day for less than $2,500,000. The population is estimated at 250,000 on the plain of Tempe alone. They built with stone as well as adobe. Some of their buildings which have now been explored were nearly five hundred feet long, two stories high and with walls seven feet thick. Here relics have been found, funeral urns and domestic pottery. There is evidence that the whole civilization was destroyed and the inhabitants of the valley scattered by earthquakes. Mr. Cushing believes that the Toltec civilization flourished through a great extent of territory, and his discoveries certainly are of sufficient interest and value to warrant a thorough and extended examination.

M. D. Babcock, inventor of the Babcock fire extinguisher, died in the almshouse at San Francisco last Saturday, aged 70. He received $10,000 royalty a month on his machines at one time.

Six persons were killed at Cincinnati last week by an explosion of dynamite which a negro was drying in a stove.

CARD.—Frs. Lee and McCaughen, are sincerely thankful to the parishioners of St. Patrick's church for their beautiful presents, consisting of sleigh, robe, whip and driving outfit.

Monson, Dec. 25th, 1887.

CHRISTMAS.

And How it was Observed in this Vicinity.

PLEASANT WEATHER AND A "MERRY CHRISTMAS" GENERALLY.

Better weather could not have been wished for than that furnished for the Christmas season this year in Eastern Hampden. Clear, and just cold enough to be invigorating. As the day fell on Sunday this year the celebrations were extended over three days—Saturday, Sunday, Monday—and the children have had a Christmas season which they will not forget for months to come. The past year has been a prosperous one throughout the country, and the Christmas season shows the results of this in many ways. Merchants have had an unusually good holiday trade, and are correspondingly happy; those who have spent weeks and days planning for their friends are happy in giving; and the recipients of these remembrances are also happy in receiving; the postal clerks have had all they could do with holiday packages and bundles the past week, are just getting over a portion of the rush, and they are happy. The day was generally observed, and taken altogether was indeed a "Merry Christmas."

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Grace church Sunday-school had its annual Christmas tree Saturday evening. Santa Claus was on hand as usual, and the good number present enjoyed themselves, or seemed to, very much. There were no exercises other than the distribution of the presents. The pastor preached Sunday morning from Luke 2: 10.

BONDSVILLE.

The exercises at the Methodist church, Christmas eve, passed off very pleasantly and the children all deserve much credit for the way they all performed their parts. After the distribution of the loads of the two Christmas trees, Mr. Russell, in behalf of the friends of the pastor, presented Mr. Fuller with a fur collar and cuffs, and Mrs. Fuller with a purse of money.

LUDLOW CENTER.

Christmas was spent very quietly. The services in the churches were appropriate to the day. At the Congregational church the subject for the morning sermon was: "The Coming of the Wise Men to see Jesus." In the evening a song service was held which, under the lead of the chorister, was rendered with much spirit. A goodly number observed Monday as a holiday, enjoying the fine sleighing and visiting friends.

THORNDIKE.

There was the usual attendance at St. Mary's Catholic church on Christmas day. The first mass was at 8 o'clock, with high mass at 11, Rev. F. J. Lynch officiating. The altar and sanctuary were neatly trimmed with flowers and evergreens, and with several altar boys who were dressed in white, was a sight worthy of mention. Stearn's mass in C, with organ accompaniment, was rendered by the choir in an excellent manner under the direction of organist Luman. Vespers, with benediction of the blessed sacrament, was celebrated at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

At the Congregational church Rev. Mr. Drake of New Haven occupied the pulpit and delivered the sermon. Monday exercises consisted of a Christmas tree, dialogues, speaking, etc., and a sociable, which was followed by a good time in general. There were also several private trees.

BELCHERTOWN.

One of the largest gatherings xmas day was at T. J. L. Parsons, eighteen guests, children and grand children being present. A good time was enjoyed by all, and there were many pretty and valuable gifts.

Christmas was observed very generally by the different denominations. The Congregational people met at the town house, and it was filled to overflowing, these being the only trees filled Saturday evening. Two large trees were laden with presents from Santa Claus, and he made his appearance with his buffalo overcoat, and his sack filled with good things. As he was unable to bring them all in, an elephant manufactured for the occasion came down through the crowd looking as natural as life. Speaking, and music appropriate to the occasion rendered the time a pleasant one, and many hearts were made light for the evening's entertainment.

Monday evening the Methodist society had their trees, and the vestry was packed with people. Santa Claus came down the chimney in the old-fashioned way, dressed in a coat made of cotton batting and covered with spangles. He was masked and his conversation was very amusing to the young. He presented three little girls with dolls as large as they were able to carry, and his favorite boy a drum, and asked him to drum to him, which he proceeded to do.

LUDLOW.

Mrs. J. B. Haviland, principal of the Parker street school, and Miss Flora Thurston, teacher of the primary department, gave their pupils a merry time Wednesday, the 21st, the last day of the term. The children and many of their friends assembled at two o'clock. There was a short programme consisting of songs and recitations, followed by a visit from St. Nicholas, who plucked the fruit from a well-ladened Christmas tree and distributed it among the children. All were then invited into another room where two large tables were loaded with goodies. The children ate all the cake, candy, oranges and peanuts they could, and were sent home with happy faces and glad hearts full of love for "Old Santa."

The children of the three primary schools in the brick building were given a happy surprise on Friday afternoon, in the shape of a Christmas tree, and a visit from a funny old fellow all dressed in fur, of whom some of the very little ones were afraid until they recognized the pleasant voice of one of their own teachers.

There was a very pleasant gathering in the Union church Saturday evening, when each member of the Sunday-school was given presents from the tree. Christmas services were held in the church Sunday. Rev. Edward Day talked about the coming of Christ as told by Micah. The music was furnished by a large and well-chosen choir. A Christmas concert was given by the Sunday-school in the evening.

WILBRAHAM.

The Congregational Sabbath-school observed Christmas Eve by a tree in a chapel of the church, at which the hearts of both parents and children were made glad by beautiful and numerous gifts presented by a Santa Claus who came down a chimney built for the purpose at one side of the stage, on which stood the trees. The superintendent, Mr. F. E. Clark, was the surprised recipient of an elegant easy chair from the school, and the teachers each received beautiful presents from their classes. The musical programme prepared for the evening was much enjoyed by all present. Sabbath morning Christmas sermons were preached by the pastors of both churches, and music appropriate to the occasion rendered by the choir.

Sunday evening a children's Christmas service was held in the Congregational church by the Sabbath-school, assisted by the choir.

Monday was observed as a holiday by the closing of the academy and the public schools of the town. Miss Fannie Merrick, teacher of the lower village school, was presented by her pupils with a pair of vases. The students of the academy held an entertainment in Rich Hall in the afternoon, consisting of games, charades, Mrs. Jarley's wax-works, etc. In the evening a social interview was held in Fisk Hall, at which Prof. Benj. Gill was surprised by the gift of a rare and valuable book from his pupils in Greek, and Miss Wythe, the preceptress, was also given a remembrance by the students.

WEST WARREN.

Christmas passed very quietly in the village this year. The mills shut down Monday so that the operatives had two days in which to enjoy themselves.

The Congregational and Methodist Sunday-schools had Christmas trees in their respective churches Saturday night. At the Methodist church a good representation of an old-fashioned fire place was built on the platform, a telephone was placed on the shelf over the fire place, and direct connections were made with Santa Claus, who greatly amused the children by giving them an account of his wanderings. First he was in France, by and by in Germany, then he skipped to England, thence to New York, and the little ones began to hold their breath as he drew nearer and nearer, and there was a happy ring in the laughter that greeted the announcement that Santa Claus was in Springfield, loading up, and that he would be with them as soon as they finished singing another song. Then when the sleigh bells and Santa Claus' shouts to his reindeer were heard, the excitement was at its height, and even the older heads were as anxious to see and seemed as elated as the children were. Before disappearing Santa Claus was presented with a handsome Oxford Bible by the pastor in a brief speech. He soon reappeared and remarking that "one good turn deserved another," presented Rev. B. F. Kingsley with a purse of $35, raised by his parishioners. The distribution of the presents on the trees occupied some little time, and then all went home feeling that they had thoroughly enjoyed themselves, and that this was the best Christmas entertainment they had ever seen.

PALMER.

Monday was the day most generally observed in this village. The mills shut down, and the stores closed at noon. There were a large number of private gatherings, and some Christmas trees. At the Baptist church Saturday evening there was a Christmas tree for the Sunday-school, with presents for all, and the children enjoyed themselves immensely. Sunday morning the pastor, Rev. A. W. Weeks, preached especially to the children.

At St. Thomas' Catholic church Sunday there were two masses, at 7 and 11 a. m., Peter's Mass in D being given by the choir with orchestral accompaniment.

At St. Paul's church last Saturday evening there was a free supper for the children of the Sunday-school, followed by a Christmas tree and presents for all. The pastor, Rev. F. W. Betts, was presented with a purse of $127, for the purchase of a type writer. Sunday morning Mr. Betts preached a Christmas sermon from I. Cor. 15: 42 "The first man Adam became a living soul, the last Adam became a life-giving spirit." In the evening the children of the Sunday-school gave an interesting concert.

Christmas day at the state primary school was a very pleasant one for the children. Instead of the usual Christmas tree a small thatched house was put up in the chapel and Santa Claus officiated at the door of his house in the distribution of the presents. Every child was the recipient of a present, the smaller children receiving theirs in the morning and the larger ones in the afternoon.

At the Congregational church Sunday the pastor preached a sermon appropriate to the occasion. The children of the Sunday-school were to have had a supper Wednesday evening, but on account of the storm it was postponed until this evening.

WARREN.

The children of the Congregational Sabbath school were given a supper in the church parlors Saturday evening, and a merry time they had. The tables were filled with fruits, cake, grapes and confectionery. One gentleman, who must be specially fond of children, had seventy bags of candy done up for the little folks. A large pudding on the table contained bon bons, and soon all the children were discovered with caps on their heads, and made a pretty sight. A large sleigh drawn by two reindeer made its appearance loaded with presents for both old and young, the pastor and wife being remembered with a sum of money. It was an occasion which will long be remembered by the children as the happiest Christmas they ever spent. Sunday was observed by a sermon prepared for the occasion by the pastor, with the usual Christmas anthems. In the evening there was a Sabbath school concert which was very interesting. The church was decorated with overgreens and flowers, among them several Chinese lilies. The Sabbath-school was reorganized during the day.

Dr. and Mrs. Breck entertained a party of their friends Saturday afternoon, and had a Christmas tree.

The Methodist Sabbath school had their usual Christmas tree loaded with nice things for the children Saturday night. A large number was present. Much credit is due Mr. Hitchins for making it attractive, as he spares no pains to do so. The children were all well pleased with their pleasant time. A concert was given Sunday night which did much credit to the children.

The Universalists held their Christmas festivilities in the town hall Friday evening. A supper was given the children, and Santa Claus came in a large cutter, which he had well loaded for the occasion, and which caused much excitement among the children, but none were forgotten, and all were happy.

There were many private gatherings on Monday and many of the children had their usual Christmas trees.

It is generally conceded that the stockings were unusually well filled this season.

The teachers in the high school building presented Mr. Benson, who has charge of the building, an astronomy on Christmas day as a token of their appreciation of his thoughtfulness for their comfort.

THREE RIVERS.

Last Sabbath being Christmas day, appropriate services were held at the Baptist church, the pastor taking for his text Isa. 9:6, "And his name shall be called wonderful." The Incarnation being God's way in bringing himself into close relationship to mankind, revealing the wonderful wisdom, power and love of God, manifesting in Christ's life and teaching those principles which, if understood, would simplify those problems over which so many stumble, and would without fail make life replete with joy and satifaction and our homes bright with happiness and purity. Christ was shown to be wonderful in His relationship to God and man. The work He came to accomplish was fully achieved, and He not only earned the title of being wonderful, but proved Himself to be the Son of God with power by his resurrection from the dead. On Monday Porter Jenks, assisted by William Graves placed two good Christmas trees on the platform, after which they were loaded with a great variety of presents. The concert preceeding the distribution of gifts was very creditably given, the young friends having done their part well in speaking. The superintendent, with his hosts of assistants, proceeded to disburse the presents, and a very enjoyable time it was to the children, parents, and friends. The pastor and all his family were very generously remembered.

One hundred and two persons were present at the supper given by Supt. R. C. Newell at the Palmer Mill boarding house Saturday evening to the children under 16 years of age employed in the mill. The overseers and their wives were also invited to be present, and the invitation was accepted by nearly all of them. After supper there was speaking by the children, reading by C. F. Gegenheimer, and singing by a quartet. After a short speech of Mr. Newell, three hearty cheers for him were given by the children, after which they went home to tell their less fortunate companions what a good time they had.

A Christmas sermon was preached in the Union church Sunday morning with appropriate music by the choir. In the evening the Sabbath school had a Christmas concert, and Monday evening the usual Christmas tree, with an enjoyable time for both the children and the older people.

BRIMFIELD.

Christmas day coming on Sunday the people of this community took different days for its observance, as their convenience made it desirable, school No. 4, Fanny B. Gates, teacher, leading off Friday evening at the school house, where parents and pupils met and with Christmas tree and other accessories had a very pleasant and enjoyable gathering.

The Converse families met at the Wyles mansion Sunday, where with a Christmas tree beautifully laden all, both parents and children, had a very pleasant gathering. The only drawback was the absence of Wm. M. Ducker and wife, who were detained in New York city by Mrs. Ducker's sickness.

At the First church Sunday morning Rev. Joseph Kyte preached a sermon appropriate to the day. At noon the Sunday-school organized for the ensuing year, electing Edward B. Brown superintendent, and James H. Plimpton assistant, Miner H. Corbin secretary and treasurer, Newton S. Hubbard, William Sutcliffe, Mrs. David W. Jones, Mrs. J. Reed Brown, managers, Julia T. Brown librarian. Monday evening, under the direction of the Ladies' Benevolent Society, Christmas was celebrated with due formality at the vestry, which was tastefully decorated, but not so elaborately as in former years, as the curtains and platform for the presentation of the cantata, "King of Winter," prevented so doing. But for this the large audience were more than compensated when the curtain was drawn and they had a view of King Winter on his throne, and over 30 of his court in costume. The cantata occupied about one hour, and was presented in a very creditable manner, giving great pleasure to the audience. Much credit is due to Mr. Sutcliffe, leader of the choir, and Miss Belle L. Brown, organist, and about 40 pupils of the Sunday-school, for this pleasant entertainment. This was followed by a free supper for all, after which the presents from a large Christmas tree, beautifully filled, were distributed. As a whole it was the most satisfactory Christmas festival for years.

At the Second Congregational church, Sunday, in place of the regular service was an exercise by about 30 of the younger portion of the Sunday-school, A. A. Upham, superintendent, entitled the "Birth of Christ", interspersed with music on the piano and singing by the quartette. The exercises were well rendered and gave satisfaction to all present. Sunday evening a praise service was held, consisting of Scripture readings by the pastor, and singing appropriate to the day. The decorations for the festival Monday evening, under the auspices of the Ladies' Union, were elaborate and tasteful, and to the credit of the artist, J. W. Morgan, and his co laborers. The platform recess was spanned by an arch bearing the inscription "All Hail the Day when Christ was Born," the arch being festooned with wreaths of evergreen, from which hung several evergreen Christmas bells. The Christmas tree was on the platform, and was well stocked with presents for both old and young. In the center of the hall was a tasteful booth 8 by 10 feet, for the sale of fancy articles, candy, etc. Above the booth and pendant from the ceiling was a large evergreen star, dotted with many small stars of silver and gold, producing a pleasing and brilliant effect in the evening. At the north end of the hall was a "fish pond," and near by this notice, "All persons forbidden fishing in this pond under the penalty of the law without tickets, which can be had for 5 cents," showing that Santa Claus does not allow trespassing on his domain. At the northwest corner of the hall was another booth for the sale of ice cream. In the evening they had a full house, supper was furnished to the children of the Sunday-school free, to others for 35 cents each. From this and the sale of ice cream, fancy articles, etc., the ladies realized about $45.

MONSON.

At the Methodist church Saturday evening there was a supper served to the children, and a short entertainment, followed by a Christmas tree, and the hearts of the little ones were gladdened by numerous presents. The Sunday morning and evening services were well attended. Much attention was given to the musical programme, but there were no decorations. At the morning service the pastor, Rev. J. H. Emerson, chose his text from St. Luke 2: 11, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour which is Christ the Lord."

This glad announcement, he said, by an angel from Heaven to humble shepherds on the Plains of Bethlehem, was the completion of a long train of proclamations concerning the coming Saviour. The prophecies relating to Christ were like a golden thread through the whole of the Old Testament record. Through all the ages from Eden to Bethlehem the promise of a Saviour was first among the gifts of God to Israel, and chief among the anticipations of God's chosen people. Moreover, faith in Christ has availed for salvation through all the ages since the first transgression. A Saviour to be, was as mighty to save all who accept the promise of His coming, as a risen Saviour has ever been since to all who believe. Our text and its connections will lead us to consider at least four matters of special interest on this glad Christmas day, viz:

I. Certain Christmas foreshadowings.
II. The Christmas visitation of the angels.
III. The Christmas welcome.
IV. The Christmas proclamation begun by the angels and the faithful shepherds and continued ever since by the Heralds of the Cross, whose sound has gone forth into all the earth, and whose words unto the ends of the world.

The Christmas visitation was a memorable one in history. It has never been paralleled or equaled since. We may entertain a Coleridge, an Arnold, a Farrar, as we have recently, and soon possibly may welcome a Gladstone over from England, but the honor would not be so great if the Queen herself and all her court should come to our shores, as the visit honored earth of heavenly visitations from an upper world rather than merely from foreign shores. And why did the angels come? No humiliation of Christ, whether of the manger, the wilderness, the wayside or the cross, was ever allowed to make him contemptible in the eyes of men. Every marked humiliation was followed by some marked glorification. The Christmas proclamation was begun by angels and continued by the shepherds, and has never ceased to be attended since. The Gospel will be proclaimed by increasing numbers to the end of time.

The Christmas concert by the Sunday-school in the evening was of the usual high order.

Central Hall was appropriately decorated for the services of the First Universalist church, held Sunday morning and evening. In the morning the pastor, Rev. Ira A. Priest, preached a sermon on "What must I do to be saved?" taking his text from Acts 16:30. He said:

This question was asked by a man who was frightened. His gaze had been turned within. What have I done, what has my life been, what am I? The man who falls into water, though he is not there over a minute, has time to think of every bad deed he ever committed. It is proverbial that in the hour of death a man never thinks of punishment but only of the horror of sin; and asks how he can make amends, how he can be saved. Christ came to answer that question and says: "Repent." Simple confession and sorrow, while it is good so far as it goes, will not do. Sorrow stands still and looks back upon the sin. Repentance is resolve, is a vigorous shaking off of the bonds of iniquity and a setting of the face to the right. "Have faith in Christ." Belief in what some one has said about Him will not do. Make that life your life. "I am the way." He has shown us how to walk therein; avoid the rock of danger by overcoming evil with good. The motive that leads to life is love for a noble soul. He has faith in Christ in whose breast throbs the love and holiness of the Christ-life. Life means something. Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance. Downright repentance and faith in the life are bound to bear fruits of righteousness. If there is no fruit, it shows that there is no repentance and no life. Character is not formed in a day. Salvation is not conferred by the laying on of hands. A man is saved from passion, from evil, from the hell of sin, not mysteriously, but by practical growth in practical goodness.

A Christmas concert was given in the evening by the Sunday-school, at which there was an unusually large attendance. The programme was made up of singing by the school, recitations and dialogues. The musical programme by the choir was very good, especially the duet, "Echoes from Judea," by Mrs. C. H. Bruce and Miss Mary Feather.

At the Congregational church there was a large attendance at both morning and evening services. In the morning the musical portion of the exercise was unusually fine. Rev. F. S. Hatch, the pastor, preached a sermon appropriate to the day on "The Incarnation," his text being drawn from St. Matthew 1, and a portion of the 23d verse. In the evening there was a concert by the Sunday-school, which was one of the best ever given.

St. Patrick's church presented a beautiful appearance, the interior being ornamented with evergreen, and the altar decorated with flowers, by the young ladies of the parish. The programme was carefully arranged and creditably carried out under the direction of Miss Mary Cantwell, organist of the church. An eloquent sermon on the "Feast of the Nativity," was delivered by Rev. Wm. McCaughen, assistant pastor. Fr. Lee celebrated vespers. The first mass was at 8.30, with singing by the Sunday-school choir; solemn high mass was at 10.30, with singing by the large choir—Farmer's mass in B flat. Following is the musical programme:

Offertory.....
Adeste Fidelis.....B. Garbette
Ave Maria.....Millard
O Salutarius.....Weignand
Soloists, Misses Keefe, Cantwell and Wm. Cantwell

VESPERS, 7.30 p. m.

Domine, Dixit Dominus, Confitebor, Beatus, Laudate Pueri, Laudate Dominum, ...Mercadante / .....A. H. Rosewig
Magnificat.....W. C. Peters
O Salutarius.....A. J. Holden
Tantum Ergo.....Lambilotte

Monday evening the children of the Sunday-school enjoyed their Christmas tree, Santa Claus being impersonated by the genial Nick Cantwell, giving to each little one a remembrance of his patron, St. Nicholas.

WARE.

Christmas festivities were never more enthusiastically entered into than this year, commencing with Christmas trees Saturday evening by some of the Sunday-schools. By the kindness of the pastors of the several churches and others we are able to give so full a report of the doings.

The East Congregational church was finely decorated, the pulpit and the whole front of the gallery being covered with evergreen, and a large star in evergreen back of the pulpit. Sunday morning the services opened at the usual hour by choice selections by the choir. Rev. Alfred T. Perry, pastor, preached from I. Timothy, 1:15, the following being a synopsis of the sermon:—

Amid the general joyousness of the holiday season it may be well to consider the true springs of Christmas gladness. We should rejoice to-day, chiefly because it is the birthday of Jesus. If we celebrate the birthdays of great men, with more reason do we remember His, for no person has extended his influence with wider sweep through so many centuries. But we celebrate on Christmas day not merely a birthday—we commemorate an incarnation. This is the great fact in history. Though reason cannot explain it, reason and faith can accept it. It is attested, as all historical facts are, it affords the only rational explanation for the events that have followed it. Our text sets forth the fact and the purpose of the Incarnation. 1. Jesus came into the world from another state of existence. He had been eternally with God. He was the creator of the World. He came voluntarily, laying aside his glory and "taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men." 2. He came to save sinners. Not to show men how to live, but to regenerate and sanctify. The whole world lost in sin, needed renovation; and neither Rome nor Greece nor Judea could supply a renovating principle. The race could only be swept away entirely, or be redeemed from sin. God chose to do the latter, and Christ came to accomplish this purpose of God. We see in nations and in individuals how fully he has accomplished his purpose, though the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. As we stand beside the manger in Bethlehem we may learn the desperate strait of the sinner. How serious the disease of sin, whose only remedy was the humiliation and sacrifice of the Son of God! We see, too, the infinite love and condescension of God, and the true course of Christmas joy. God is manifest in the flesh! A Saviour is born! Let us learn a lesson of humility and self-sacrifice, and give thanks that Jesus came into the world on Christmas day to save sinners.

At 6 o'clock in the evening there was a Sunday-school concert, the subject of which was "The Manger Child," a Christmas carol service, which was very interesting, consisting of singing, recitations, and responsive readings, all taking their parts in an admirable manner. Monday evening the church was well filled to see and hear the festivities of the Christmas trees. The music was furnished by the Amateur Orchestra, and was exceptionally fine. A pleasant feature of the occasion was the marching of about 40 of the children up and down the aisle singing Christmas carols. There was also singing by Miss Mary Lawton and Miss Richardson. The trees, two in number, were large and heavily ladened with presents, which Santa Claus, in the person of little Charlie, son of Fred C. Blood, proceeded to pass out to the waiting multitude of anxious little ones.

The Unitarian Sunday-school had their Christmas gathering Saturday evening, when Santa Claus made his appearance with a pair of deer and a sleigh loaded with goodies for the children. This society has no settled pastor, and so had no special Christmas service on Sunday.

The observance of Christmas at the Methodist church commenced Saturday evening with a tree in the vestry. The place was very prettily decorated, and in front were the three trees that were loaded with a beautiful array of fruit that makes the hearts of all the children, and older ones, glad. It was a pleasant sight to see the place full of people with pleasant faces and their hearts full of good will to all about them. All seemed satisfied with the presents and enjoyment of the evening. Sunday morning Rev. E. Hitchcock preached a sermon appropriate to the day, from Matt. 2:10: "And when they saw the star they rejoiced with exceeding great joy."

This was the same star they saw in the East. It could not have been the star which we see now, known as the Star of Bethlehem, for it guided them to the house where the babe was. They rejoiced because this was the light which was to guide them into the presence of Him concerning whom they had read in the Prophet. They did not understand all that the coming of Christ meant to the world, but they knew that the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem marked the beginning of a new era in the history of the world. They knew that light had come, and through him all the nations of the earth should be blest. They knew that God had promised that He should redeem His people from their sins. How many sinners then have rejoiced because of the light which guided them to the Saviour's feet. How the clouds have been scattered. How the doubts and fears have been removed. How their sins have been forgiven. He, the kindred spirit, has witnessed with their spirits, that they were the children of God. May we appreciate the innumerable blessings that come to us through the light of the Gospel.

The church was not very elaborately decorated, but what had been done was very neat and appropriate. There was an arch over the pulpit of green, and hanging from the center was a very pretty Christmas bell made of evergreens. There were also evergreen wreaths in the windows and about the room. In the evening the Sunday-school gave a Christmas concert, which consisted of recitations and readings by the children, and Christmas songs by a select choir. Fifteen of the children gave an exercise, each holding a card on which was a letter, and each giving a verse commencing with the letter they held. When all were together the letters read "Babe of Bethlehem." All took their parts in an excellent manner.

At the French Protestant church in Grand Army Hall, Rev. Thos. A. Dorion, pastor, took for his text Luke II. 1, and said:

"An author that has written the life of a great man without telling where such a man was born and without mentioning the latest circumstances that surround him at the time of his birth, will have made a novel, but not a book of history. In beginning his life of Christ St. Luke shows us that Jesus is really a man, as John in writing his life of Jesus shows us that the same Jesus is our Eternal God; "He was at the beginning with God; was God." "There was no room for Him in the inn." We not only learn from the lesson of to-day that Jesus of Nazareth was man and God, but also that when Christ came there was no room for him in the world. The guests of an hotel are, as a rule, complete strangers to each other, having no sympathy between them, although living under the same roof. In a residence or home it is different, it is a family, all bound together by a common feeling of sympathy and love. At the birth of Christ the Jewish nation itself was divided in religious sects and political parties. The facts are that at that time, (as at present), the whole world was an immense "hotel" inhabited by guests rather than by a family of which God was the head and ruler. On account of the animosity existing between each member of the human race, "There was no room for Christ." The Son of God takes his abode only where love dwells. So, where jealousy, envy, hate and strife exists "There is no room for Christ," be it in a nation, church or family. Sin has more than divided man against man, and brother against brother. It has divided every ungodly man with himself. In such a man I defy anyone to find peace. In such a heart there is no room for Christ. Put out those guests. Repent, and let Christ come in. Let hope, faith and charity dwell in your heart, and then "there will be room for Christ also." You say no. "I stand at the door," said he. So open and let Him come in. "He will sup with you and you with Him," and believe me it will be the most blessed Christmas repast that you have ever partaken of.

The Methodist society kindly offered the use of their vestry to the French Protestant society to hold their Christmas festivities in, which was gratefully accepted, and occupied Tuesday evening. The trees were well filled with pretty and useful presents, part of which were contributed by members of the Congregational Sunday-school. There were about one hundred present. The entertainment consisted of singing, recitations, dialogues, readings, etc., in French and English. The dialogue "Train to Mauro," was presented by Miss Lizzie Bouchard, L' Blackbird and Louis Pannier. "The Marriage of the Poet," by Charlie Dorion and the Misses Bouchard, Louise and Lucy Pannier. The song, "How to make a Shoe," sang by the little daughters of Mr. Dorion, Florence and Eva, pleased the company hugely. Mr. Marrotte gave some violin selections. All did their parts well and enjoyed the evening.

The Trinity Episcopal society held their Christmas tree in the town hall Saturday evening, and had a most enjoyable evening. The Sunday services were held as usual, in the town hall. The people of this church, feeling the lack of a suitable building, made very little Christmas decoration. On a background of evergreen were placed the words, "Glory to God in the highest," and the remainder of this burst of praise, "peace on earth, good will toward men," was continued on the communion table. The morning sermon by Rev. C. W. Duffield, pastor, was upon the words "Peace on earth." The main thought of the sermon was an attempt to show that peace indeed came to this earth with the coming of the Christ child.

The Christmas at Ware Center was held in the church Saturday evening, and was in charge of the following committee of arrangements: W. G. Cummings, J. A. Rich, Nelson Trench, Miss Minnie Winslow, Miss Mary Rich and Miss Fannie Breckenridge. There were two large trees at either side of the front and one smaller one in the center. The entertainment consisted of several recitations and readings by the young people, among which the recitation by little Ralph Jaqueth seemed to be enjoyed by those present as much as any of the others.

A RECORD OF SUCCESS.

If our readers want one of the best, they will make no mistake in ordering The Boston Daily Globe as their daily newspaper for 1888. In addition to all the news The Globe has entertaining stories for the ladies and young folks. In fact, during the year every reader of The Globe receives a whole library of choice stories. The Globe began the year 1887 with a circulation of about 100,000 and ends it with about 125,000. During the year it moved into its new building, which all of our readers are invited to visit when they visit Boston. Out of 1300 daily newspapers in the United States, not over six do a business of $1,000,000, and The Globe is one of those six. During the year 1887 The Globe has published more than 225,000 'wants,' and is the greatest want medium of New England. The Daily Globe is only 50 cents per month, carrier or newsdealer.

I have not used all of one bottle yet. I suffered from catarrh for twelve years, experiencing the nauseating dropping in the throat peculiar to that disease, and nose bleed almost daily. I tried various remedies without benefit until last April, when I saw Ely's Cream Balm advertised in the Boston Budget. I procured a bottle, and since the first days' use have had no more bleeding—the soreness is entirely gone.—D. G. Davidson, with the Boston Budget, formerly with Boston Journal. 2w40

I give honor to whom it is due. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy cured me of Bright's disease and gravel. I have recommended it to scores of people with like success, and know it will cure all who try it.—Mrs. E. P. Mizner, Burg Hill, O. Send 2c. stamp to Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y., for book how to cure Kidney, Liver and Blood disorders. Mention this paper.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 1y23

WIDE AWAKE, 1888.

We have a primer, entitled "A Modern Wonder," which sets forth with singular fullness and brevity what is going to be in Wide Awake for a year ahead.

The primer is not very long. The little pages are easy to read. But, it holds such a wealth of learning and entertainment, you wonder how so much can be got into a dozen months; and yet you read on the title page that the half is not told.

It is a wonder! Wide Awake is a veritable library, changing from month to month and year to year, and always growing better apparently.

But what we can't understand is how they can put so much money in it and pay so much for getting subscribers.

The Holiday number contains the premium list of 32 pages. They give every boy or girl who gets subscribers almost as much in its choice of two or three hundred things as the money they send amounts to! And the things are such as people want; a good many of them new to most of us. Even the premium list is good reading.

Where the profit comes from out of $2 40 a year is what we can't make out; but that is none of our business.

Send for the primer to D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

THE PANSY

Has begun its new year already, the year we shall shortly be calling 1888.

Pansy's story to last all through the year is "Up Garret," a sequel to "A Sevenfold Trouble," with the same people in it. Her Golden Text story is "We Twelve Girls," an actual history of how twelve girls did try to live up to certain golden texts.

Margaret Sidney also makes another story out of the children that figured in the "Little Red Shop" of last year. Her story this year is "The Old Brimmer Place."

Rev. C. M. Livingston writes a serial, "Treasures: Their Hiding and Finding."

The Pansy is going on as heretofore, a monthly magazine made up of weekly parts; the first part is made up of Pansy's Golden Text and other stories; the second part Pansy's Own and other stories; the third part stories of what is going on in America; the fourth part stories of life abroad; the fifth of missionary work.

The weekly arrangement adapts it to Sunday-school use, the weekly parts being given out seperately. It is better than any Sunday-school paper; indeed it is the Sunday-school paper.

A sample copy can be got by sending five cents to the publishers, D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

Misfortune's Child.

Her father is a stalwart man,
Of stature six feet three,
And built throughout upon a plan
That paralyzes me.

His daughter is a gentle girl,
And says she holds me dear,
But how am I to claim my Pearl
So long as he is near?

I'm not a coward, but, you know,
Some things are simply rash,
And I'm afraid if I should go
Her pa would make a mash.

So I am parted from my dove,
And curse my wretched fate,
Because her pa my ardent love
Does not reciprocate.

The Only Remedy for

Contagious Blood Poison.

Mr. D. B. Adams of Union, South Carolina, writes: "I was afflicted with a terrible case of blood poison for about thirteen months. I was treated by the best physicians, and used various remedies, but received no substantial relief. I finally tried the Swift Specific, and about four bottles cured me sound and well."

Col. R. H. Kieser, editor and proprietor of the Opelika, Ala., Times, under date of August 3, 1887, writes: "When a young man, through indiscretion, I contracted a terrible disease which has stuck to me for years. Some five or six years since I was troubled with pains, so as to make it difficult for me to walk. Having advertised the S. S. S. in my paper for several years, I concluded I would try it to see if there was any efficacy in the medicine. I commenced using it according to directions and used half a dozen bottles. I was once at a way station, and getting left, I walked the seven miles and have never felt any return of the old malady. After experiencing the good effects I must say I am satisfied with the result. I am sixty-eight years of age and I feel now like a young man and can go to the case when necessary and set up from six to eight thousand ems without any inconvenience. I send you this without solicitation."

Mr. F. Woehl, 211 North Avenue, Chicago, under date of June 12, 1887, writes: "I deem it my duty to thank you for the cure I received from your excellent medicine. I contracted a very severe case of blood poisoning about two years ago. Hearing of your medicine I went to a drug store, the proprietor of which persuaded me to buy a preparation of his own, which he said was a sure cure. I used six bottles of his stuff and grew worse all the time. At last I got disgusted and despaired of a cure. I met a friend who told me that your medicine cured him. I went to the same druggist and demanded your medicine. He reluctantly sold me twelve bottles, and I am now perfectly cured. I write this for the benefit of sufferers, to prevent their being deceived by false representations. I thank you again for the benefit derived from your medicine."

Dr. J. N. Cheney, a prominent physician, residing in Ellaville, Schley county, Georgia, in a letter recounting the infallible success he has in curing contagious blood poisoning cases in his extensive practice, writes: "Those who know the almost inevitable, permanently dangerous effects of mercury will welcome your discovery of S. S. S. as a boon to humanity. The medical profession, is coming slowly, and in some cases secretly, to the use of S. S. S. in cases of blood disorder. Of course a medicine that cures poisoning in its worst form must purify the blood of ever disorder."

8 PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGES IN KANSAS.

During the next 90 days we shall give our customers 8% on any money they may send us for investments we have for sale. We have on hand First Mortgages and applications for money on first mortgage loans, mostly upon 160 acre farms, amounts ranging from $250 to $500. We have also mortgages in amounts $1000 to $20,000 at 7% which we offer. How much money can you furnish us for these loans? They are A1 security. The stringency in the money market enables us to cut down amounts applied for in each case to an amount that is safe beyond a doubt. Now is the time to get a nice line of small gilt edge loans. Write for our new Investor's Guide. Remit with advice to JOHN D. KNOX & CO., Investment Bankers and Loan Agents, Topeka, Kas. Boston Office: Room 24, No. 36 Bromfield street. 4w37

ARE YOU CONSUMPTIVE?

Have you a cough, bronchitis, asthma, indigestion? Use PARKER'S GINGER TONIC without delay. It has cured many of the worst cases and is the best remedy for all affections of the throat and lungs, and diseases arising from impure blood and exhaustion. The feeble and sick, struggling against disease, and slowly drifting to the grave, will in many cases recover their health by the timely use of Parker's Ginger Tonic, but delay is dangerous. Take it in time. It is invaluable for all pains and disorders of the stomach and bowels. 50 cents at druggists. 4w 37

I am now prepared to resume teaching on Piano, Organ or in Thorough Bass and Harmony. TERMS—Beginners, 50 cents; Advanced Pupils, 75 cents: Thorough Bass and Harmony, $2.50. A few pupils can be accommodated with piano or organ for practice at an advance of $2.00 per quarter. Special rates to pupils from out of town.
